FOR THE PEOPLE FOR EDUCATION FOR SCIENCE

LIBRARY
OF
THE AMERICAN MUSEUM
OF NATURAL HISTORY
JOURNAL
OF THE ASIATIC SOCIETY OF BENGAL.

VOL. XLVIII.

PART I. (HISTORY, ANTIQUITIES, &c.)

(Nos. 1 to IV.—1879: with 19 Plates and 2 Maps.)

EDITED BY

THE PHILOLOGICAL SECRETARY.

"It will flourish, if naturalists, chemists, antiquaries, philologers, and men of science in different parts of Asia, will commit their observations to writing, and send them to the Asiatic Society at Calcutta. It will languish, if such communications shall be long intermitted; and it will die away, if they shall entirely cease." — SIR WM. JONES.

CALCUTTA:
PRINTED BY G. H. ROUSE, AT THE BAPTIST MISSION PRESS, AND PUBLISHED BY THE ASIATIC SOCIETY, 57, PARK STREET.
1879.
23.92468. July 26
CONTENTS

OF

JOURNAL, ASIATIC SOCIETY OF BENGAL, Vol. XLVIII. Part I,

FOR 1879.

---

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>No. I</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Some Further Notes on Kālidāsa.—By George A. Grierson, B. C. S.,</td>
<td>32</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>No. II</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>The Sect of the Pran-nāthis.—By F. S., Growse, Bengal Civil Service, M. A., Oxon, C. I. E.,</td>
<td>171</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>No. III</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Rough Notes on the Distribution of the Afghán Tribes about Kandahar.—By Lieut. R. C. Temple, 1st Goorkhas, (with two maps),</td>
<td>181</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hamír Rásá, or a History of Hamír, prince of Ranthambor. Translated from the Hindi.—By Brajanátha Bandyopádhyáya, Jeypore,</td>
<td>186</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>No. IV</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Pali Derivations in Burmese.—By H. L. St. Barbe, B. C. S.,</td>
<td>253</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A peculiarity of the river names in Asam and some of the adjoining countries.—By S. E. Peal, Sibsagar, Asam,</td>
<td>258</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Bulandshahr Antiquities.—By F. S. Growse, c. s., m. a., Oxon., c. i. e. (with three Plates). With a note by Dr. Rájendrála Mítra, Rai Bahadur, c. i. e., ........................................ 270

The Copper Coins of the old Mahárájás of Kashmír.—By C. J. Rodgers, (with two Plates), .......................................................... 277

The Copper Coins of the Sultans of Kashmír.—By C. J. Rodgers, (with a Plate), ................................................................. 282

Observations on some Chandel Antiquities.—By V. A. Smith, b. a., c. s., and F. C. Black, c. e., (with six Plates), ..................... 285
LIST OF PLATES

IN

JOURNAL, ASIATIC SOCIETY OF BENGAL, PART I,

FOR 1879.

✓ Pl. I (pp. 3, 4). Rough Survey of Barrows near Junapani in the Nagpur District of the Central Provinces of India.
✓ Pl. II (p. 4). Barrows and Cup-marks in Europe.
✓ Pl. III (p. 4). Remains of Barrows near Nagpur, India.
✓ Pl. IV (pp. 5, 13). Iron Implements found in the Junapani Barrows.
✓ Pl. V (pp. 14, 15). Cup-marked Boulders.
✓ Pl. VI (p. 23). Illustrations on the Serpent Symbol.
✓ Pls. VIII & IX (p. 273). Inscriptions from Bulandshahar.
✓ Pl. X (p. 274). Bulandshahar Antiquities.
✓ Pl. XIII (p. 284). Copper coins of the Sultans of Kashmir.
✓ Pls. XIV & XV (pp. 287, 288, 293). Inscriptions from Khajuráho.
✓ Pl. XVI (p. 289). Rubbing of Inscription on a Figure of Debi at Ghu- lávar Kherá.
✓ Pls. XVII, XVIII & XIX (pp. 294, 295). Plans of Temples at Khajuráho.

Map No. 1, (p. 181). Showing Villages about Kandahar.

ERRATA.

J. A. S. B., Pt. I, Vol. XLVI, p. 231, line 23, Dele 'Jains and.' This error was due to a misreading of an ill-written Urdu manuscript.

Ibid. p. 231, line 1, for '1730 A. D.' read '1721 A. D.' and in line 2 for 'son' read 'chela.' In both these instances I was misled by the Gazetteer. For the corrections I am indebted to Mr. Irvine in J. A. S. B., Vol. XLVII, Part I, pp. 286 and 367.
INDEX

TO

JOURNAL, ASIATIC SOCIETY OF BENGAL, VOL. XLVIII,

PART I, FOR 1879.

ADVANCE of the Wazir, 67
Afghan tribes about Kandahar, 181
Ahar, a town near Bulandshahar, 271, 274
Ahi, a snake, 271
Ahiban, a Rája of Bulandshahar, 271
Ahichhatra, 271
Alu-kshetra, snake-land, 271
Ak-su, white water, 258
Ala-uddin’s war with Hamir, 186, 195, 201
Amravati Tope, 9
Anecdotes showing Ahmad Khan’s habits and character, 154
Anna-Puma Devi, a form of Siva’s sakti Parvati, 18
Anoma, introduces Buddhist sculptures in Burma, 254
Antiquities of Bulandshahar, 270; Chandeli observations on, 285
Archaic Sculpturings of Barrows, 14
Aryan element in Burma, 254
Asam, river names in, 258
Ashut-Tárá-Devi or Goddess of Destiny, 29
Attack by the Atíths of Rája Indar Gir, 109

BAITHAK, name of temples in Hamirpur, 296
Bamhauri, undescribed temple at, 285, 296
Banchati, old name of Bulandshahar, 271
Bandyopadhyaya, translation of Hamir Rasa, 186
Bangash Nawábs of Farrukhábád, 49
Bár Brahman Chandél, maker of the Bársi Talão, 296
Barakzai, an Afghan sept, 181, 184
Baran, old name of Bulandshahar, 270, 271, 272
Barrows found in the Nizam’s territory, 2
Barrows or grave-mounds, 1
Barsi Talão, undescribed Temple at, 295, 296
Battle of Khúdaganj and death of Naval Rae, 60
Benares, Nag Kuan or serpent’s well at, 21; Nag panchami or Snake festival at, 22; Nageshwar or snake temple at, 20; presence of snake symbol in, 17
Bhilá Topes, 7, 12
Black, F. C., observations on some Chandeli Antiquities, 285
Bopya Deva, a Rája of Kashmir, 278
Bráhman tradition on prehistoric remains, 2
Brahmanical temples, 291, 292
Bráhmans, zamindars of Chhatarpur, 286
Bulandshahr Antiquities, 270
Burman, alphabet, borrowed, 253; Aryan element in, 254; collection of popular texts, 255; dictionary, by Dr. Judson, 285; orthography in, 254; Pali Derivations in, 253; river names, 280; transliteration, 252, 255; kingdoms, Indian origin of, 253

CAMPAIGN in Rohilkhand, 102
Chandéli Antiquities, observations on some, 285; coinage, 256, 287; royal house, 286; dynasty, 288; Bár Brahman, a Chandeli prince, 296; inscriptions, 288; chronology, 288
Chandeli remains at Khajuráho and Mahoba, 285; Thákurs, zamindars of Khajuráho claim to be aborigines, 286
Chandrabhan, the Chohan, Rája of Nimráná, 186
Chandra Gupta II, gold coin of, 272
Chaturbhuj, temple of, in Khajuráho, 290
Chhatarpur, native state, 286; rája Partáp Singh of, 291, 292
Chhatrasal, Raja of Panna, 171
Cohonis, genealogical table of, 248; Hamir of Rathambor, 192; origin of, 187; Raja Chandrabhun, 186; Raja Jeyal, 188
Chronicle of Bangash Nawabs of Farrukhabad, 49
Chronological Table of the Nawabs of Farrukhabad, 166
Chronology of Chandelas, 288
Coinage, Chandel, 286, 287
Construction of temples at Khajuraho, 290
Coins, copper of Kashmir, 277, 277, 282; gold, found at Bulandshahar, 271, 272; gold of Kashmir, 277; silver of Kashmir, 277, 282
Copper Coins of the old Maharatjas of Kashmir, 277; of the Sultans of Kashmir, 282
Cruciform temples in Khajuraho, 290
Cunningham, Genl., A., on Bhilsa Topes, 12; description of Chandel remains, 285, 287, 288, 289, 293; on coins of Kashmir, 277; on identification of Varanavata, 272
"Cup-marks" of barrows, 14, 15, 31

DAJJAL, the name of Antichrist, 178
Dalton, Col., description of prehistoric remains, 2
Dangerfield, Mr. Henry, discovery of prehistoric remains, 2, 3, 6, 7, 8
Debi, figure of, at Gulavar Khera, 289
Defeat of the Wazir, 71
Derivations, Pali, in Burmese, 253; of names of the week-days, 254; of Sanskrit words in, 254
Descendants of Ahmad Khan Ghulib Jung, 167
Dhdam, a name of the Supreme Spirit or Paramatma, 171
Dhamis, name of the followers of Prannath, 171
Dhanga, Raja, inscription of, 288
Di, a prefix or suffix in Asamese river names, 258; variations of, 258, 261
Dictionary, Burmese, by Dr. Judson, 255
Didda, Maharatni of Kashmir, 277
Dieha, Rapti, and Gun-ti, tributaries of the Ganges, 258
Dor Raja, Budh Sen, 273; Mangal Sen, 273; Chandra Sen, 273; Har Dutt, prince of Baran, 272, 274
Dukri, name of Chandel coin, 286 domes, of temples in Khajuraho, 290, 291, 292
Durani, an Afghan tribe about Kandahar, 181, 182

EXECUTION of the Five Chelas, 69; of the Five sons of Nawab Muhammad Khan Ghazanfar Jung, 68

FARRUKHABAD, attacked by Shuja-ud-daula, 186; Bangash Nawabs of, 49; visitors to, 128
Fergusson, on Ganthai Temple, 293, 294
First Visit of Ghazi-ud-din Khan Imad-ul-Mulk, 124
Five-headed snake (Nag panchamukhi,) 17

GANTHAI Temple at Khajuraho, 293, 294, 295; age of, 293, 294; pilgrim's inscription in, 293; derivation of its name, 294
Genealogical Table of Sa'dat Khan Burhan-ul-Mulk's family, 169; of Safdar Jang's family, 170; of Ahmad Khan's descendants, 167; of Chohans, 246
Ghazi-ud-din 'Imad-ul-Mulk, eldest son of the celebrated Nizam-ul-Mulk Asaf Jah, 128
Ghilzais, an Afghan tribe near Khelat i Ghilazai, 181; near Kandahar, 182 Ghoshâ's, P. C., note on the articles exhibited by Mr. Rivett-Carnac, 50
Ghalur, Raja of, 286
Glassford, (Col.) found an iron axe in the Godavery district, 7
Gold coins found at Bulandshahar, 271, 272; of Kashmir, 277; leaflet found about Khajuraho, 287; leaf found among the ruins of Manikyala, 287
Granite used in the construction of Chausat Yogini Temple, 290, 296
Grierson, G. A., further notes on Kâlîdâsa, 32
Grose, F. S., Bulundshahr Antiquities, 270; sect of the Prân-nâthis, 171
Gûlabbâri, or royal pavilion, 136, 141
Gulvar Khera, figure of Debi at, 289
Guntte, derivation of, 258
Gumna Begam, a poet, was the daughter of a poet, 130
Gupta, Chandra II, gold coin of, 272; Skanda, inscription of, 274
Gya, Chandel Raja's near, 286

HAMILTON, Dr. Buchanan, on river names, 259
Hamir, Raja, his birth, 192; his war with Alâ-ud-din, 195, 201, 203, 207, 209, 223, 225, 227, 229, 239; his death, 245
Hamir Rasa, a history of Hamir, 186
Hamirpur, Chandels in, 286; undescribed buildings in, 295
Index.

Hanna, discovery of prehistoric remains, 3, 6
Hardatt, a Dor Rájá, 272
Harsha, gold coins of, 277
Hislop, Rev. Stephen, antiquarian, 2
History of Hamir, prince of Ranthambor, 186

IMPLEMENTS of iron, prehistoric, 6—9, 10
Indian origin of Burmese Kingdoms, 253
Indoor, derivation of, 275
Indus, derivation of, 259
Inscriptions, Chandel, 288; at Khajuráho, 288, 289, 293; of pilgrims in Cauhalt Temple, 293; two, from Bulandshahar, 273
Intrigues in the Pathán Camp by Mahbúb 'Alám, 117
Irvine, W., the Bangash Nawábs of Farrukhábád, 49

JAGATRAJ Bandela, a prince, 286
Jaimal Singh, of Gidhaur, representative of the Chandel Royal House, 286
Jain, naked statues, 293; statue of Sumatínáth disclosed by the drying up of the Kirat Ságar at Mahoba, 288; temples, 291, 294, 295
Jafkári, remarkable position of temple at, 292
Jaya Deva, Rájá of Kashmir, 278
Jinanáth Temple, magic square and inscription of 11 lines on door of, 287; rectangular form of, 294
Judson, Dr., Burmese Dictionary, 255; Burmese derivation, 256
Jumna, derivation of, 259
Junapaní, Nagpore district, tumuli in, 2, 3, 8

KACHLU'S, zamindars of Chhatapur, 286
Kachyén Hills, stated of, 253; reduced to writing, 255; spoken by Singphos, 255
Kadphises, copper coin of, 272
Káfra Máhá, temple in Mahoba, 289
Kalasa, a Rájáh of Kashmir, 277, 289
Káládási, at Síbáy Singh's court, 34; at king Bhoja's court, 35, 39; further notes on, 32; traditions in Mysore, 32; traditions in Mithilá, 32; born at Dámoda, 270, 273; Kalinjá, black river, 270
Kálíndí, stream near Bulandshahar, 270, 273
Kalinjá, inscriptions from, 288
Kandahar, Afghan tribes about, 181
Kandáriya Mahadev, temple, in Khajuráho, 290
Kara-su, black water, 258, 260
Karamí Hills, state of, 253
Kashmír, copper coins of, 277, 282; silver coins of, 277; gold coins of, 277
Khajuráho, temples at, 274 remains at, 285; inscriptions at, 288; zamindars of, 286; temples at, 287; gold-leaflets found about, 287
Khoják Pass, names of, 155
Khumáganj, battle of, 60
Kurúa, flourishing mart on I. E. Railway, 270
Kirá Ságar at Mahoba, 288
Kol, part of dominion of Dor Rájá, 272
Kumáon Rock markings, 20, 27, 29; snake well at, 23
Kunwar Math, temple of, at Khajuráho, 221
Kurmis, zamindars of Chhatapur, 286

LAILAT-UL-KADR (or night of power), 179
Lál Baraní, a Muhammadan Martyr, 273
Last or Mixed Dynasty, 278
Latter, Capt., on Burmese orthography, 254
List of river names in Assam, 261
Lodhis, expelled Chandels, 286

MADANA Varma, Rájá, inscription of 288, 289
Mádán Ságar in Mahoba, 289
Mádári, temple in Mahoba, 289
Madras, barrows, 2
Magic Square, sculptured, 287
Mahoba, remains at, 285; fifty-two bazars at, 289; Chandel zamindars in, 286; Kirat Ságar at, 288; Madán Ságar at, 289
Maharráta affairs: 1752—1711, 145
Máisey, inscriptions from Kalinjá, 288
Makárbái, temple at, 291, 295, 296
Maniyá Garh, ancient fort of Rajgárh, ancestral place of Chandel Thakurs, 286
Maniyá Deo, tutelary goddess of the Chandels, 286
Manson, Dr., Pali Grammar, 255
Méthá part of dominion of Dor Rájá, 272; antique column at, 274
Mitra, Dr. R., note on Bulandshahar antiquities, 275; translation of inscription, 274
Múritang Mahadeo, temple of, at Khajuráho, 291
Muzaffar Jáng's marriage, 145
Index.

NAGA Hills, rivers names in, 258, 260
Nāga Rājā, Śrī Vadana, 275
Nāgballī or Cobra-creeper, 26
Nāgeshwar, the snake Temple at Benares, 22
Nāg Kūān or serpent’s well in Benares, 21, 23
Nāg panchami, a great fête, 22, 26
Nagpore, prehistoric remains in, 1; barrows, 1, 2; snake worship, 24
Nāhār Sīhān, founder of the Sambhal fort 273
Nandi or Sīva’s Bull, 18, 19, 20
Nasir-uddīn Mahmūd, reduced Kol, 272
Naval Raē, 50; his death, 60
Nawāb Ahmad Khān, 49; marries again, 123; at battle of Pānīpat, 125; blindness and death, 152; habits and character, 154; wives, 159; children, 159; chelas, 160; genealogical table of descendants, 167
Nawāb Ahmad Khān Ghālib Jang, 58
Nawāb Imām Khān, and the Confinement of the Territory, 49
Negotiations with Nawāb Ahmad Khān through ‘Alī Kūli Khān, 112
Nizām’s territory, barrows in, 2
Note to Bulandshahr Antiquities by Dr. Rājendralāla Mitra, 275

Observations on Chandel Antiquities, 285
Origin, Indian, of Burmese Kingdoms, 253
Orthography in Burmese, 254
Oxus, derivation of, 259

P

ADAM, a sage, his penances, 189
Pāli Derivations in Burmese, 253; Grammar, by Dr. Mason, 255; inscriptions on gold coins, 271; MSS., 255; words have several forms in Burmese, 257
Pañchala, old capital in Burma, 253
Panjpao, an Afghan sept, 184
Parikshit, story of his death, 271
Pārmāl, a Tomar Rājā, 271, 272, 288
Partap Singh, Rājā, of Chhatarpur, restored temples, 291, 292
Peal, S. E., a peculiarity of the river names in Assam and some of the adjoining countries, 258
Peculiarity of River names in Assam, 258
Phallus worship, 28
Popalzai, a sept of the Durānī Afghans, 181, 182, 183
Prān-nāth, a Kshatriya by caste, lived in the beginning of the 18th century, 171
Prān-nāthīs, sect of the, 171
Prehistoric Remains of Central India, 1
Prithīvī Varman, Rājā, 289
Prithvīrāj, the celebrated Chohan, 186

RAJX Abhāran, 271; Bhim of Etawa, 273; Dhanga, inscription of, at Kajurāho, 288; Pārmāl, 271, 288; Madana Varman, 288, 289; Partap Singh of Chhatarpur, 291, 292; Prithīvī Varma, 289; Tomar 271
Rājās, Chandel, near Gya, 286
Ratnagiri, first Sultan of Kashmir, 279
Renewal of Negotiations, with Nawāb Ahmad Khān, followed by peace, 120
Restorations of temples at Kajurāho 291, 292
Rivett-Carnac, J. H., prehistoric Remains in Central India, 1; Snake Symbol in India, especially in connection with the worship of Śiva, 17
River names in Assam, 258; spelling of, 260; list of, 261
Rodgers, C. J. on Copper Coins of Kashmir, 277, 282

SAHAB-UDDI’N Muhammad Ghori, took Baran, 273
Sanchi Topes, 7
Sandstone, used in construction of temples, 290
Sangassa, old capital in Burma, 253
Sanscrit inscriptions from Bulandshahar, 273; words in Burmese, 254
Sarabhātuā kingdom in Burma, 253
Sarpas or serpent, is a reptile, 51
Sect of the Prān-nāthis, 171
Self-supporting domes in the Kajurāho temples, 291
Serpent on prehistoric remains, 17
Sherring, Rev., description of Benares, 21
Shuja’ud-daula and Shāh ‘Alam attempt to attack Farrukkhabād, 136; Shuja’ud-daula takes refuge at Farrukhābād, 144
Siege of Allahbād Fort, 77; of Fathgār or flight of the Nawāb, 82
Silkrees or steeples of temples very graceful in design, 290, 291, 295
Silver coins of Kashmir, 277, 282
Similarity between the marks found on the stones and the “cup marks” of the Barrows in Europe, 14; between the remains found in the Indian Barrows and the contents of the Barrows in Europe, 12; between the Tumuli and the Barrows of Europe, 11
Singh, speak Kachyen, 255; river names, 260; spelling of, 261
Skanda Gupta, inscription of, 274
Smith, V. A., observations on some Chandeli Antiquities, 285
Snake Symbol in India, 17; temple at Benares, 20; worship of, 17, 19, 22, 24; wells, 21, 23; personal ornament, 17; festival, 22, 26; as a canopy, 17, 19; in connection with Mahadev, 18
Spelling of Asamese river names, 260; of Turanian words, 261
Square silver coins of Kashmir, 282
St. Barbe, H. L., Pali derivations in Burmese, 253
Statue, broken, of Sumatinath, at Mahoba, 288; of elephant at Mahoba, 289; naked Jain, 293
Steeples, of temples in Khajuraho, 290, 291, 292; of temple at Mahoba, 288; of elephant at Mahoba, 289; of Jain, 293
Su, a widespread term for "water," 258
Sumatinath, statue of, at Mahoba, 288
Sūraj-bānasī, or descendants of the Sun, 171
Sutherland, translation of record in Visvanath temple, Khajuraho, 287 Taylors, Col. Meadows, on prehistoric remains, 2, 5, 12
Temple, R. C., rough notes on the distribution of the Afghan Tribes about Kandahar, 181
Temples, at Khajuraho, 274, 293; of Jina-nāth, 287, 294; Gantai, 293; of Mritang Mahadeo, 291; at Makarbai, 291, 295, 296; at Barsi Talao, 395, 298; at Jatkari, 292; at Bamhauri, 295, 296; Brahmanical, 291, 292; Jain, 291, 294, 295; Kandariya Mahadeo, 290, 291, 292; of Visvanath, 287, 289, 291, 292; Madari, 289; Kunwar Math, 291, 292; Kakra Marh, 289; Chaonsat Jogini, 290; Chaturbhuj, 290, 291, 292
Ti, a prefix or suffix in Asamese river names, 258; variations of, 258, 261
Tomár Rájá, traditional founder of Bulandshahar, 271, 272
Topes of Sanchi or Bhilsa, 7; Amravati, 9
Transliteration, in Burmese, 253, 255

U

UPALA Dynasty, 277

V

VARANAVATA, identified with Baran, 272
Visit of the Almora Rájá, to Nawáb Ahmad Khan, 111
Visitors to Farrukhábád, 128

W

EEK-DAYS, names of, in Burmese, 254
Words for "water" in various languages, 270
Worship of the snake very common in the old Nágpúr Province, 24

Z

ABITA KHAN, a prisoner in the hands of the Marhatts, 151
Zain ul-Abidin, coins of, 282
Zodiac, names of, in Burmese, 254

Page 273, line 10, for 'darjal' read 'dargah.'
Page 273, line 13, for 'Bijay' read 'Bijay.'
Page 273, line 13, for 'Dasarath' read 'Dasarath.'
Page 273, line 33, for 'name' read 'namo.'
Page 275, line 1, and 5, for 'Indrapura' read 'Indrapura.'
Page 275, line 10, and 15, for 'Hastinapuru' read 'Hastinapur.'
Page 275, line 13, for 'Sardhana' read 'Sardhana.'
Prehistoric Remains in Central India.—By J. H. Rivett-Carnac, Esq.,

At a meeting of the Society held in 1874, some iron implements dug out of the barrows of the Nagpore district of the Central Provinces were exhibited by me, and a brief notice was then given of those grave-mounds and their contents. I have long intended preparing for the Society the detailed description together with sketches of these interesting remains then promised. But various circumstances have delayed the working up of the notes taken on the spot and the copying of the sketches, and I am only now able to offer them to the Society.

Last year when in France, I paid a visit to the Museum at St. Germain-en-Laye, celebrated for its prehistoric collection, and there the resemblance between the remains, dug out of tumuli in Brittany and other parts of France, and the contents of the Nagpore barrows presented itself in the most striking manner. M. Bertrand the Director of the Museum and President of the Society of Antiquaries of France, to whom the subject was mentioned by me, strongly urged the preparation of a detailed account of the Indian grave-mounds and their contents, together with sketches, so as to admit of further comparison between the Indian and European types.

The subject is well known to the Society, but it is hoped that the following details may not be without interest, and that they may assist in directing further attention to the extraordinary resemblance between the Prehistoric Remains of India and of Europe.

Barrows or grave-mounds, surrounded by circles of stones, are found in several districts of the Nagpore province. They have been examined and described at various times by Colonel Glasfurd, Colonel Godfrey Pearse, R. H. A., and Mr. J. J. Carey, C. E. The late Rev. Stephen Hislop, well known for his interest in all antiquarian subjects, accompanied Sir Richard Temple, the then Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, on an exploration of the Bori remains during the rainy season of 1864, and it was then that occurred the accident which resulted in Mr. Hislop's lamented death.

Similar barrows were found in the Nizam's territory and in Madras by the late Colonel Meadows Taylor, C. S. I., and an interesting account of that officer's researches, by which the similarity of the remains found in India and in Europe is clearly demonstrated, was published in the Journal of the Royal Irish Academy. The Journal of the Asiatic Society also contains descriptions by Colonel Dalton, C. S. I., of similar grave mounds and circles in the hilly country of Chutia Nagpore, which in many of its conditions resembles the districts of the old Nagpore province.

The most extensive of the many groups of this class of tumuli that are found scattered over the district of Nagpore is situated near Junapani, a hamlet lying about 5 miles to the west of the civil station of Nagpore, on the high road to Katole. The proximity of these barrows to Nagpore has marked them out for careful investigation, and they have been visited and opened at various times by the late Rev. S. Hislop, Mr. Henry Dangerfield, C. E. and Mr. Hanna, C. E. No detailed account of the discoveries has as yet been published. The following notes refer chiefly to some explorations made as far back as the cold weather of 1867 by Mr. Alfred Lyall, C. S., then Commissioner of the Nagpore S. Division, Mr. Blanford, F. R. S. and myself.

From the people of the neighbourhood, and even from the Brāhmans and other learned persons of Nagpore, who speak with authority on the ancient history of the province, no satisfactory information regarding the tribes who constructed these barrows is to be obtained. Some will tell you the story that these mounds are the work of giants, or of the Gaeees or Shepherd kings, regarding whose rule in Central India, at a period prior to the Aryan invasion, a deep-rooted tradition exists. That the circles are very old, the condition in which they are now found distinctly shews, and the remains discovered therein leave no doubt that they were once the burial-places of a people of whom these circles are now the only trace that remains to us.

The southern slope of a line of low bare basaltic hills, which rise just beyond the village of Junapani, and which form the chief feature in the scenery of Nagpore and its neighbourhood, is covered with these barrows. The largest group consists of 54 tumuli. A smaller group situated on an adjacent spur, at about 300 yards from the main body, contains but 10
ROUGH SURVEY OF COWS NEAR JUNAPANI
IN THE AGPUR DISTRICT
OF THE
CAL PROVINCES OF INDIA

Examined by H. Rivett-Carnac.

Scale 1 Inch = 300 Feet.
ROUGH SURVEY OF BARROWS NEAR JUNAPANI IN THE NAGPUR DISTRICT OF THE CENTRAL PROVINCES of INDIA

Examined by H. RIVET-CARNAC.

Scale 1 Inch = 300 Feet.
barrows. Further south again, at a distance of about half a mile, on the other side of the village, is a third group. The position is somewhat low and damp, the ground sloping towards the small stream which runs past the village of Junapani. The remains discovered by Mr. Hanna were dug out from the barrows of this group, and were found in a less perfect state of preservation than the iron implements from the tumuli situated further up on higher ground on the hill side. A fourth and still smaller group, situated further north, was examined by Mr. Henry Dangerfield. For several miles round, similar collections of barrows, which have not yet been noted or explored, are to be seen festooning with their dark funereal boulders the slopes of the low trap hills which extend far south towards the Wurth river.

A rough plan of the Junapani circles accompanies this paper; see Plate I.

In all these groups the tumuli are of the same type, consisting of circular mounds of earth of various sizes, surrounded by single and, in some instances, by double rows of trap boulders, selected from the masses with which the hill-side is strewn and the presence of which in great numbers, ready to hand, doubtless suggested the locality as a burial-place to the tribes so many of whose members lie here entombed. The diameter of the circles varies from 20 feet to 56 feet, the tomb being perhaps of large or inferior dimensions according to the consideration of the person buried. No barrow of the groups as yet examined by Mr. Hanna exceeds 56 feet in diameter; and 56 feet seems to have been a favourite size, as each group contains several tumuli of exactly these dimensions.

The trying climate of Central India, with its prolonged scorching heat, followed by drenching rain, so destructive to every sort of masonry building, has told with great severity upon even these solid masses of trap rock. They are all more or less wrinkled by age, and in some cases the stone has been split and its outer coating stripped off by the action of heat and damp, and it is doubtful whether the boulders that have thus suffered now retain their original form. There is thus some difficulty in determining whether they have been artificially shaped. It would appear from the resemblance borne by most of the blocks, ranged round the tumuli, to the still undisturbed masses with which nature has strewn the hill side, that, in most cases, the stones were not dressed, but that boulders of about the same size, bearing the nearest resemblance to oblong cubes, were chosen from the masses on the hill side and rolled down to the site of the tumulus, and then ranged side by side in their natural state round the circular mound of earth raised over the grave. Each circle, however, generally contains two or three stones, larger than their neighbours, which from the comparative regularity of shape would appear to have been artificially dressed. It is on these selected stones that the "cup-marks," resembling those found on exactly similar tumuli in Europe are to be seen. And it suggests itself that the boulders were perhaps specially prepared to receive the inscriptions or ornamentation for which these marks were designed.

So far as can be judged from the present appearance of the stones at Junapani, they were certainly in most instances laid lengthways, side by side, round the edge of the circle, in a manner resembling the arrangement of the stones in the Clava Tumulus figured on plate XI of Sir J. Simpson’s "Archaic Sculpturings" (see Plate II, fig. 1 and Pl. V, fig. 1) a work to which it will be necessary to make frequent references in the present paper. Mr. Carey was, I believe, of opinion from the appearance of the stones at the Khywarree barrows examined by him, that the blocks had once been placed on end, and it is not improbable from the position of some of the largest blocks at Junapani, that some of these also may have been so placed. One of the stones covered all over with cup-marks supports this view. It is conical in shape. It is the largest of the many large blocks at Junapani. Its dimensions are as follows: length ft. 10.3; breadth ft. 2.4, and height above the ground as it lies ft. 2.6. This block, and indeed nearly all those surrounding these tumuli have sunk deep into the earth and there is perhaps half as much below the surface of the ground as appears above it. Making allowance for this, the cubic contents of the stone would be say 16,000 feet, and taking 200 lbs. to the cubic foot of trap rock, the weight of this stone would be about 8 tons. The stones on the north side of the circle, whence the drainage of the hill is, are deeply imbedded in the earth, and are sometimes hardly to be traced above the ground, the washings of the hill side, carried down by the drainage of ages, having nearly covered them up completely.

The height of the mounds within the circles of stones is seldom more than from 3 to 4 feet above the level of the neighbouring ground. There is no doubt, however, that the mounds, now nearly as hard as the rock itself, were originally composed of earth, loosely thrown up, and were consequently much higher than they now are. In the course of many years, perhaps centuries, the boulders, surrounding these mounds, have sunk deep into the hard soil, and during the same period the once loose earth has become consolidated and compressed into its present form. In Plate III one of these barrows is shewn, the stones being ranged round the mound shewn in the background. In the foreground are some boulders of a tumulus that has been disturbed and examined.

The number, size and position of the barrows will be best explained by the accompanying plan Plate I. It will be noticed, that the largest barrows are generally placed low down on the slope of the hill, the smaller circles, with the smaller stones being grouped on the top, and it suggests itself, that for the former tumuli the large boulders had to be selected from particular BARROWS AND CUP MARKS IN EUROPE.

To shew the similarity between the European and Indian Types.

(From Sir J. Simpson's "Archæic Sculpturings.") spots and rolled down the slope, whilst for the smaller tombs stones could be collected without difficulty at the summit or on any part of the hill side.

Although, on no one occasion, has a collection, so varied as that which rewarded Colonel Pearse's exploration of the large solitary tumulus near Kamptee, been discovered, no single barrow at Junapani has been opened without remains of more or less interest being exhumed. The class of iron implements found in these tumuli in different parts of the Nagpore district, and further south again, resemble one another as closely as do the tumuli themselves. Some half a dozen barrows only have as yet been examined, out of the many hundreds which are known to exist, so that further and more interesting discoveries may not unreasonably be expected from future explorations, if conducted on a careful plan.

The remains discovered were all found in the centre of the barrows. The earth, which had to be dug through, was invariably extremely hard and firm, as if many centuries had weighed it down and compressed it into its present compact form, changing soft earth into stiffish clay. The remains were always reached with considerable difficulty. On each occasion that I have examined these tombs, the first indication of "a find" has been broken pieces of pottery of red or black clay, which generally make their appearance at from 2 to 2½ feet from the surface. Immediately beneath these, the fragments of metal implements, and ornaments are come upon, together with further traces of broken pottery in considerable quantity. The fragments are evidently the remains of urns originally placed intact within the tombs, but which, consequent on the tumulus having no interior chamber, have been broken by the masses of earth and stone thrown in to fill up the mound. In two cases the shape of the urns imbedded in the clay was distinctly traceable, but it was found impossible to take them out intact. I regret I did not know at the time, what I have since learnt from M. Bertrand and have seen demonstrated at the Museum of St. Germain, that the pieces, if carefully collected, can generally be joined together after the manner of a Chinese puzzle, and the original form can thus be satisfactorily reproduced.

With the urns the whitish coloured earth (noticed by Col. Meadows Taylor in the Dekhan remains), offering a striking contrast to the surrounding dark soil, is met with. I am unable at present to say of what this substance consists. It is probably the remains of bones. On only one occasion have traces of human remains been found at Junapani, and in this instance six small pieces of bone, weighing ⅝ths of an ounce only, were obtained.

The implements discovered with the urns are, with one exception, of iron. The most interesting of them are figured in Plate IV, and the following remarks will help to describe generally their peculiarities:
Nos. 1, 2 are pieces of iron, thickly encrusted with lime and rust, found by Mr. Hanna in the group of barrows near the Junapani stream, to which allusion has already been made. The damp situation seriously affected these specimens, and they are not in such a good state of preservation as the other remains found in the vicinity. They offer hardly any attraction to the magnet.

No. 2 was also found by Mr. Hanna in the same group. It has suffered severely from rust, but the form is intact. It resembles a "spud," but it is not improbably a "palstave" of which many specimens have been found in similar tombs in Scandinavia and in Great Britain. It has no "eye" through which to loop the thong by which palstaves are supposed to have been attached to a wooden handle. But I find that, in some of the Irish specimens also, these eyes are wanting, (see figure 275, No. 510, page 384, Vol. I, of a Descriptive Catalogue of the Antiquities of the Museum of the Royal Irish Academy, by Sir W. Wilde, Dublin, 1863). The palstave found at Junapani exactly resembles this specimen.

Similar implements have been found by Col. Glasfurd in tumuli in the Godâvery district, and at page 358, Vol. XXIV, of the Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, in a paper by Col. Meadows Taylor, c. s. i., describing "The Cairns, Cromlechs, Kistvaens and other Celtic, Druidical or Scythian monuments in the Dekhan," will be found figured a similar implement discovered in one of the tumuli of the Hyderabad country. I may mention here incidentally, that Col. Sladen, who made an expedition from Mandalay to the western borders of China, mentioned to me, that implements similar to these, but having in addition the "eye" so well known in the palstaves of Europe, were discovered by him on his travels. Length of specimen 4 1/4 inches.

No. 3 is a knife or dagger, much corroded, found by Mr. Hanna in the same group. The guard at the hilt is perfect on one side, on the other side the rust has flaked off, taking with it the iron of the guard. Length 5 3/4 inches.

No. 4 is a smaller specimen of a hatchet or battle-axe, similar to the one found by Col. Pearse, and resembling Nos. 5, 11 described below. In these specimens the bands are wanting. It will be seen that the rust is coming off the hatchet in great flakes and the bands have most probably corroded. Length 6 inches; breadth 2 inches.

No. 5 is the best specimen of the battle-axe or hatchet that has yet been discovered. It was found by Mr. Henry Dangerfield in one of the outlying groups of barrows near Junapani. The bands, with which the axe was fastened on to the wooden handle, are in perfect preservation. Length 10 inches.

This iron axe bears a remarkable resemblance in shape to the copper IRON IMPLEMENTS FOUND IN THE JUNAPANI BARROWS.

(From Photographs.)

Lithographed at the Surveyor General's Office, Calcutta, July 1879.
"celt," figured at page 363 of Sir W. Wilde's Catalogue of the Irish Antiquities above referred to. At page 367, Sir W. Wilde shows how this class of celts is supposed to have been fixed on to the handle, and he writes: "Fig. 252 represents 2 simple, flat, wedge-shaped celts passed through a wooden handle and secured by a ligature, possibly of thong or gut."

And on the preceding page, he remarks—

"Left without historic reference, and with but few pictorial illustrations, we are thrown back upon conjecture as to the mode of hafting and using the metal celt. As already stated, this weapon-tool is but the stone implement reproduced in another form, and having once obtained a better material, the people who acquired this knowledge repeated the form they were best acquainted with, but economized the metal and lessened the bulk by flattening the sides. In proof of this repetition in metal of the ancient form of stone celt may be adduced the fact of a copper celt of the precise outline, both in shape and thickness, of one of our ordinary stone implements having been found in an Etruscan tomb, and now preserved in the Museum of Berlin."

In this specimen, however, as indeed in the case of nearly all the iron axes found in Central India, the bands are of iron. And it does not appear unnatural, that, the tribes who used these weapons having discovered the use of iron, and the place of the stone hatchet having been supplied by an improved axe of iron, the ligatures of thong too, should, in like manner, have given way before the bands of iron shewn in the engraving. An axe, similar to this one in nearly every respect, was found by me in the main group of barrows at Junapani. One of the bands, however, was missing. In another case the bands were found loose by the side of a small axe to which they evidently belonged. Col. Glasfurd found in the Godavery district an iron axe similar in other respects to these, but without the bands. I am inclined to think that the bands, being of thinner metal than the weapon itself, may have been eaten away by rust and have thus disappeared. The specimen found by Mr. Dangerfield is in excellent preservation, the spot on which it was found being dry and hard.

This axe was shewn to Col. Maisey, some of whose beautiful drawings of the Bhilsa or Sanchi Topes are engraved in General Cunningham's work. He immediately remarked, that the specimen exactly resembled the weapons carved on the "Topes" of which he had made sketches years before. A reference to Plate XXXIII, Fig. 8, Cunningham's Bhilsa Topes,* will shew the hatchet with bands. In the carving on the Tope the bands are not placed well in the centre. But the accuracy of the native sculptor may have been at fault. A hatchet fastened on to the wood in the manner represented, would have been liable to fly out of the handle, an accident which the position of the bands of the specimens found in the barrow is better calculated to prevent. In Plate XXXII, Fig. 1, "Fergusson's Tree and Serpent Worship" will be found a representation of a bas-relief on the eastern gateway at Sanchi described by Mr. Fergusson as follows: "In itself it (the bas-relief) represents a family of Dasysus following their usual avocation. On the right hand, two men are splitting wood with hatchets, and what is more remarkable is, that the heads of their axes are tied on to the shafts as if they were of stone. Yet in the same bas-relief we have the tongs or ladles which certainly are of metal; and we can hardly understand a people who could make metal femurs using stone hatchets."

* See also "Orissa" by Dr. Rajendralāha Mitra, c. l. e.

It is probable then, that the carving on the Sauchi Tope is intended to represent a metal hatchet such as that discovered in the barrow and marked No. 5. And it suggests itself that the tumuli at Junapami are the remains of an aboriginal tribe, whose presence on the Sanchi sculptures, in contradistinction to the followers of Buddha, is distinctly traced by Mr. Fergusson. The significance of this point will be noticed more in detail later.

No. 6. A spear-head, much corroded, which was dug up by me from a Junapami barrow. The large axe, with one band, above alluded to, was found by its side; and, as in every instance, broken pottery in large quantities was dug up. Length 8½ inches.

No. 7. Six bangles or bracelets, found by Mr. Henry Dangerfield in a barrow adjacent to that in which the axe was discovered. They are graduated in size, and weigh from 5½ oz. to 3½ oz., the whole set weighing 1 lb. 10 oz.

The metal of which they are composed is apparently copper. A rough analysis that has already been made shows that copper is the principal ingredient, but points to the presence of alloy which is neither zinc nor tin, but which is believed to be gold or silver, possibly both. The bangles are thickly covered with a coating, in which the verdigris of the copper is apparent. But, with it, is a further substance which may be either an artificial varnish, or one supplied by organic matter and the discolouration of the metal during the many years the bangles must have been buried.

An interesting circumstance connected with these bangles is the peculiar ornamentation on one end of each of the specimens. The coating of verdigris and varnish, above alluded to, is so thick, that, at first, the markings might escape notice. But a more careful inspection and the removal of the coating of verdigris show a series of notches or punched or filed lines, resembling exactly the "herring-bone" ornamentation found on the Irish remains, which is described and figured at page 389 of Sir W.
Wilde's Catalogue before noticed. The number of the punched lines on each ornament varies from 14 to 16, and these are placed in three rows.

I have not Mr. Fergusson's paper at hand, but I think I remember reading in his description of the Amravati Tope, that in the carvings there two distinct races are traceable, the Aryans and a non-Aryan race, the latter wearing heavy bangles of the description shewn in the plate and which are similar to those still worn by the Brinjarah women and by some of the aboriginal tribes.

No. 8 is a small circular clear pebble. It was found by me in barrow No. 37, together with only one small piece of iron and a quantity of pottery. In its dirty state it did not appear very inviting, and I was at first inclined to throw it away together with the earth and stones dug out of the barrow. But as it seemed to be of a different substance from the other stones of the formation, it was preserved. I am not prepared to say that it is really a curiosity. But one side of it bears a striking resemblance to the "Altar Stone" No. 102, figured at page 132, of Sir W. Wilde's Catalogue. It has the four finger-marks on one side, on the other side a larger "finger-mark" corresponding with the large central "finger-mark" of the sketch. It may have been an ornament or amulet, and may have been set in a claw, fastened on to the two central "finger-marks."

The following specimens were all dug out of the barrow at Junapani, No. 37 in the plan, in the presence of Mr. Lyall, Mr. Blanford and myself, in January 1867. Our first impression on visiting the spot was, that as all the barrows were so much alike, it would be well to trust to chance and to open the tumulus nearest at hand. Further examination, however, brought to notice three barrows, rather more imposing-looking than those of the main group, situated at some little distance from it, in a quiet, pleasant spot near a small stream, on the south side of the hill. The centre barrow was encircled by a double row of black boulders. The circles flanking the main tomb on either side consisted of single rows of stones somewhat smaller and less imposing in character. The appearance of this small group suggested, that the centre tomb was, perhaps, that of some chieftain who had been buried with his wives or favourite children apart from his followers, in a quiet and specially selected spot. It was accordingly determined to open the centre and most imposing-looking tomb, which measured 58 feet in diameter and is the largest of the 51 barrows that form the main group at Junapani.

After digging through about 3 feet of thick, caked soil nearly as hard as stone, we came upon broken pieces of pottery in which mica was prevalent, and from amongst the fragments the iron implements, figured in Plate IV, Nos. 9-14, were collected. The excavation had evidently been carried down to the rocky basis of the hill, and earth filled up over the remains. Though thickly encrusted with rust, some of which subsequently flaked off, the iron was in good preservation owing to the dryness of the soil in which it had been buried. The photographs shew the implements as they looked some six months after they were found, after they had undergone some rough handling. No traces of human remains were found. They had perhaps long since disappeared.

No. 9. Small pieces of rusty iron, possibly arrow-heads, &c. (?)

No. 10. Spear heads (?)

No. 11. Axes, small specimens of No. 5. In one specimen the bands are perfect. They are wanting in the other.

No. 12. A snaffle bit in excellent preservation. The form is quite that of the present day. But, after all, this is hardly very remarkable and cannot be held to militate against the antiquity of the remains. The dagger, the sword and the spear have not undergone any great change during many centuries, and the snaffle as the easiest bit for a horse's mouth would have suggested itself at an early date to a race of horsemen.

No. 13. A small brooch, or buckle, or ornament, resembling in shape a bow and arrow. It will be noticed that both this and the axes are in miniature. I cannot find the passage in Herodotus, but, if I am not mistaken, it is mentioned either by him or one of the old writers, that a custom prevailed among the Scythians or nomadic tribes of that class, of burying with their dead their weapons and horse-trappings, or the miniatures of their weapons.

No. 14. A pair of iron articles of exactly the same size and shape with loops at either end. At first it was thought they might be horse bits. It afterwards suggested itself that they must be stirrups. The sculpturings on the remains found in England are supposed by some, to be rough representations of the articles buried in the tumuli. Without pausing to enquire whether this view is correct, the somewhat singular resemblance between the remains, found in this barrow, and the sculptures on the wall of the Deo Cave, Fife, may be noticed (see Plate XXXIV, Fig. 3, Sir J. Simpson's Archaic Sculptures). The so-called "spectacle marks" may be the bit, and the form of the stirrups and spear-heads may be traced in Sir J. Simpson's sketch, without the exercise of any very great stretch of the imagination. To the view, that these are indeed the stirrups of the rider, the bit of whose horse and whose spear and other weapons were buried by his side, I still adhere, believing that the foot of the horseman was placed on the piece of iron, which formed the base of a triangle, the two sides being perhaps composed of thongs passed through the loops at either end. This view receives further confirmation from the extract of Professor Stephen's note to Frithiof's Saga, extracted in a later paragraph.
Although the excavation has been extended to the solid rock, neither on this nor on any other occasion has any chamber, similar to that of other parts of India, been found beneath the mounds of the Junapani barrows. This I believe is to be accounted for by the fact, that, in the vicinity of these remains, no material like sandstone, which can be easily split and used for the walls of chambers, is to be found. In the basaltic formation of the Nagpur district, trap-boulders are the only stones available, as the contractors who had to build the bridges on the Nagpore Branch of the G. I. P. Railway found to their cost. Although these boulders answer admirably for the boundaries of the circles, they are not equally well adapted to the interior chambers. Moreover, the trap rock is here close to the surface, and a cavity for a chamber, even if the stone necessary for its construction were at hand, could only be excavated with the greatest difficulty. Further West and South again, when we come on the sandstone formation, Kistvaens and Cromlechs of sandstone take the place of, or are found in connection with, the stone circles, suggesting the view, that the same class of people in different parts of the country built Kistvaens, where the easily worked sandstone was procurable, whilst, in the trap region, they contented themselves with the barrows, such as those found at Junapani.

In addition to the iron implements figured in Plate IV and described above, many other pieces of rusty iron, some of which have no character whatsoever, and the probable use of which it is not easy to conjecture, have been found in the tombs at Junapani, Takulghat, in the Godavary district and elsewhere. Sickles similar to those figured in Col. Meadows Taylor's paper, page 357, Vol. XXIV, of the Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, and found by that Officer in the Dekhan, have been dug up by Col. Glasfurd and the late Rev. Stephen Hislop. The barrow opened by Mr. Carey, again, was found to contain bells, the counterpart of those which had been dug up by Col. Meadows Taylor in the same class of tomb, some hundreds of miles further South.

Similarity between these Tumuli and the Barrows of Europe.

The tumuli at Junapani and the remains found within the barrows having been described, the remarkable resemblance, borne by these tumuli and their contents to the sepulchral mounds and the remains common in other and distant parts of India and in other countries of the world, has to be noticed.

In the first place, the barrows and their contents near Nagpur are identical in nearly every single detail with those on the Godavery. In the southern parts of India, where trap boulders are not procurable, the tumuli, as noticed above, take the form of Kistvaens and Cromlechs, sometimes with, and sometimes without the stone circles. The remains found within this class of tombs and the position of tombs indicate that they are the burying-places of the same class of people, who for very good reasons had, in different parts of the country, to make use of different materials, on the same principle that an engineer adapts his class of work to the stone found in the locality in which he is engaged.

Col. Meadows Taylor, in his paper already alluded to, has placed side by side, in his sketch, barrows, examined by him near Alnwick in Northumberland, and the tumuli of the Dekhan of India, explored by him in 1851; and it will be seen that, in nearly every respect, these burial-places are counterparts of one another. What has been said regarding the Dekhan remains and those found in Great Britain, applies with equal force to the tumuli of Junapani and the European; and Mr. Kipling's drawing, from my sketch, of a barrow near Nagpur, given in Plate III, and one near Alnwick in Northumberland, figured by the late Col. Meadows Taylor in the paper already referred to, will show, most distinctly, the striking resemblance between the tombs in England and in India.

This interesting circumstance was noticed some years ago by Major-General Cunningham, c. s. l., c. t. e., of the Royal Engineers, who in the preface to his description of the Bhilsa Topes thus refers to it—

"To the Indian antiquary and historian, these discoveries will be, I am willing to think, of very high importance, while to the mere English reader they may not be uninteresting, as the massive mounds are surrounded by mysterious circles of stone pillars, recalling attention at every turn to the early earthworks or barrows, and the Druidical colonnades of Britain.

"In the Buddhistical worship of trees displayed in the Sanchi bas-reliefs, others, I hope, will see (as well as myself) the counterpart of the Druidical and adopted English reverence for the oak. In the horse-shoe temples of Ajanta and Sanchi many will recognise the form of the inner colonnade at Stonehenge. More, I suspect, will learn that there are Cromlechs in India as well as in Britain, that the Brahmans, Buddhists and Druids all believed in the transmiguration of the soul, and the Celtic language was undoubtedly derived from the Sanscrit &c."

The circumstance of the remarkable similarity in the shape of the tumuli being borne in the mind, the next point of resemblance is the position in which the barrows are found. Col. Meadows Taylor particularly notices, that, both in Europe and in India, these burying-places are situated on the southern slope of the hill, the sunny side in fact, and this circumstance has already been noticed in regard to the grouping of the Junapani barrows.

Similarity between the remains found in the Indian Barrows and the Contents of the Barrows in Europe.

If these two points have been established, then the third point of resemblance is in the remains buried in the tombs. Passing from the pot-in Central India.

tery urns to the metal articles found within the barrows, it is to be noticed, that, both in England and in India, the arms and ornaments of the deceased were buried with him. Further, if the list of weapons given above, sketches of some of which accompany this paper (Pl. IV), be examined, it will be seen, that to nearly every single implement or ornament, found in India, an exact counterpart can be traced among the specimens dug out of similar tumuli in Ireland, which are now in the Museum of the Royal Irish Academy in Dublin.

As further evidence on this point and in support of the view expressed in an earlier paragraph that we had indeed the good fortune at Junapani to come upon the remains of some chieftain who had been buried centuries ago with his arms and horse-trappings, I would refer to the account in Bishop Tegnier's Frithiof's Saga of the ceremonies of the burial of king Ring, and of the barrow in which the body of the old king was laid, together with his charger and his arms. Professor Stephens of Copenhagen, whose translation of the poem is well known, was good enough to send me a copy of his work some years ago when he heard of our success at the Junapani barrows. And in the note to the word "barrow," which accompanies the text, is the following description of a tumulus and its contents discovered by Russian officers in the steppes of Tartary. This description, so exact is the resemblance in detail, might have been written of the opening of the Junapani barrow, with the exception that, there being no stone other than trap rock available within many miles of Nagpur, the Junapani tumulus contained no stone vault.

"Barrow (perhaps derived from Berg, hill), grave, mound, sepulchral heap, was a vast mass of earth and stones raised over the remains of a chief or warrior of renown. Commonly one or more timbered or walled chambers protected the corpse from contact with the soil itself. Such barrows or cairns are found in Scandinavia and in the British Isles, Poland and Russia, especially in the steppes of Tartary. The borderers upon these deserts (near Tromsky) have for many years continued to dig for treasure deposited in these tumuli, and the Russian Court, being informed of these depredations, despatched an officer to open such of the tumuli as were too large for the marauding parties to undertake. He selected the barrow of largest dimensions, and a deep covering of earth and stones having been removed, the workman came to vaults. The centre and largest, containing the bones of the chief, was easily distinguished by the sword, spear, bow, quiver and arrow, which lay beside him. In the vault beyond him, toward which his feet lay, were his horse and bridle and stirrups."

The implements figured in Plate IV have been made over by me to Mr. Franks, F. R. S., F. S. A., of the British Museum.

We have then three very striking points of resemblance. In both countries the class of tumuli is the same; the barrows are always placed on the same side of the hill, i.e., on the southern slope; and the remains found within these tumuli are almost identical in character.

Similarity between the Marks found on the Stones and the "Cup Marks" of the Barrows in Europe.

There is yet a fourth and most remarkable circumstance which goes far to establish the identity of the remains found in Central India with the well-known prehistoric tumuli of Europe. This is the form of the "cup-marks" on the stones surrounding the tumuli, the existence of which on the Indian remains I was fortunate enough to be the first to discover. These cup-marks on the Junaparni tumuli and similar markings in the Kumaon hills have already been noticed in my paper in the Rock markings in Kumaon (see the Journal of the Society for January 1877), but the subject requires a brief notice in this place also.

On the stone circles of England and Scotland are found a variety of "Archaic Sculpturings" of various types. The most common of these are the cup-marks which are thus described by Sir James Simpson at page 2 of his work.

"First type, single cups. The simplest type of these ancient stone and rock cuttings consists of incised, hollowed out depressions or cups, varying from an inch to three inches and more in diameter. For the most part these cup-cuttings are shallow, consequently their depth is usually far less than their diameter; it is often not more than half an inch, and rarely exceeds an inch or an inch and a half. On the same stone or each surface they are commonly carved out of many different sizes. These cup excavations are, on the whole, usually more smooth and polished over their cut surfaces than the ring cuttings are. Sometimes they form the only sculpturings on the stone or rock, as on many Scottish monoliths, but more frequently they are found mixed up and intermingled with ring cuttings. Among the sculptured rock surfaces, for instance, in Argyleshire, there are in one group at Auchuabreach thirty-nine or forty cup cuttings, and the same number of ring cuttings, and at Camber there are twenty-nine figures, namely, nine single cups, seven cups surrounded by single rings, and thirteen cups encircled by a series of concentric rings."

Now, although I had paid several visits to the barrows of Junaparni and the neighbourhood and had noticed on the boulders small holes placed in lines, I had paid no particular attention to their existence. From their regularity and arrangement and general position on the top of the stones (Pl. V, fig. 1, 2, 3), I was led to suppose that they were perhaps the work of the cowherds, who grazed their cattle in the neighbourhood, and that they were, perhaps, used for some game similar to that which commended the tri-junction boundary marks of the village lands to the attention of the village children, who, when I was in the Settlement Department, used
Fig. 1. Rough Plan to show arrangement of boulders cup-marked on top.

Fig. 2. Boulder showing cup-marks on top.

Fig. 3. Boulder cup-marked on top.

Fig. 4. Boulder with cup-marks on side.

CUP-MARKED BOULDERS.

Scale of Figures 2, 3, & 4, 1 Inch = 1 Foot.
to be continually causing damage to our boundary platforms. Subsequent examination shewed these marks on the sides of the boulders also (Pl. V, fig. 4), suggesting that they could not be used for the game in question. About the same time I was fortunate enough to receive Sir James Simpson's book, above alluded to, which established, without doubt, the exact similarity between the marks on the Indian barrows and on the monolithic remains which have been examined and described in England.

Two classes of "cup-marks" the one large, the other small, have been found, similar to those in the English barrows. But as yet I have not traced on the barrows any of the concentric circles noticed by Sir James Simpson.* They may, however, be yet brought to light together with perhaps other and more striking particulars, linking these tumuli still more closely to the remains found at home. On Plate II, Fig. 1, a sketch taken from Sir J. Simpson's book of a tumulus with the "cup-marks" on one of the stones is given, and on Plate V will be found a sketch of a stone at Junapani with the markings as I saw them some years ago. It will be seen, that, with the exception of the stone chamber, the absence of which in the Nagpur tombs has already been accounted for, there would be no difficulty in mistaking the picture for a sketch of one of the Junapani barrows. The "cup-markings" are all shallow, the depth of the cup being about \( \frac{1}{4} \) of an inch at the most, age probably having told on the carvings.

In the present paper, I will not stop to discuss at any length the significance of these marks. The chief point I am anxious here to establish is their resemblance to the markings found in the same class of tumuli at home. It may, however, be noticed that the view generally adopted at home is, that the "cup marks" are a rough sort of ornamentation, and that they have no signification whatsoever. Without venturing an opinion regarding the object which the constructors of the barrows had in carving these marks on the stones, I would repeat what I have said in my paper on the Kumaon markings, that the arrangement of the cups is peculiar and would seem to indicate some design beyond mere ornamentation. On no two stones are the marks similar. The combination of large and small cups is striking (Pl. V, fig. 4). The permutations of the cups on the stones already examined are very numerous.† The manner too, in which the large cups are introduced, would seem to suggest that the combinations of marks may have some meaning, which may, perhaps, yet be discovered and explained. Those who are acquainted with the system of printing by the electric telegraph, and the combination of long and short strokes in Morse

* These have been found by me on the Kumaon Rocks. See Bengal Asiatic Society's Journal, January, 1877.
† These are shown in the paper on the Kumaon markings. See Journal B. A. S., January, 1877.
Code, and the recent arrangements for communicating signals to troops at night, by short and long flashes of lamps, specially adapted to the purpose, and by day by the sun-telegraph, will perhaps agree, that it is not altogether impossible, that these marks may have some, as yet hidden, signification. The Agham writing consists, I understand, of a combination of long and short strokes. This writing is found chiefly on sandstone, on which it would not be difficult to cut out long strokes with a chisel. On hard trap, however, it would be found much easier to make "cup-marks," by working a chisel round and round, than to cut strokes; and is it impossible, that, perhaps, on the trap boulders, the "cups," large and small, took the place of the long and short strokes of the sandstone lettering, in the same way that the barrows took the place of Cromlechs in the localities in which sandstone was not procurable? Or that, if this theory is untenable, the marks denote the age of the deceased or the number of his children, or the number of the enemies slain by the warrior, whose remains are buried in the tomb encircled by the stone?

Whatever conclusion may be arrived at regarding the possible correctness of any of the above suggestions, I think it will be generally admitted, that the four points of resemblance noticed above as existing between the remains found in this country and in Europe are of more than common interest.

The sketches will shew that (I) the shape of the tumuli in India and in Europe is the same.

(II) The barrows in India and in Europe always face towards the south.

(III) The remains found in the Indian barrows resemble almost exactly the remains dug out of similar burial-places in Europe.

(IV) The cup-marks on the boulders which surround the Indian tombs are identical with the marks found on the stones placed around the same class of tumuli in Europe.

The inferences to be drawn from these points will be noticed in a later paper.

In his work on "Tree and Serpent Worship" Mr. Fergusson has urged the desirability of workers in the rich field of Indian Antiquarian research collecting information regarding the worship of the snake, which is known to prevail in various forms in many parts of India.

The accompanying instalment of rough jottings and sketches, made at various times, has been worked up by me into the present imperfect shape during the Christmas holidays. It is now submitted to the Society in the hope that this paper, although doubtless full of faults, may at least induce discussion, and thereby assist in placing me on the right track, and in awakening further interest in this important subject amongst those who have better opportunity than I have of following it up.

The snake as a personal ornament, or as a canopy surmounting the figure, is not, of course, confined to representations of Śiva, and in the collection of the deities of the Hindu Pantheon that I have been able to make, the five-headed snake (Nāg panchamukhi) is to be seen overshadowing Vishnu, Garuḍa and others. The Sēsha or Ananta in the pictures of Vishnu is well known. Still, as Moor says at p. 36 of his Hindu Pantheon, "As emblems of immortality, serpents are common ornaments with many deities. But Mahádeo seems most abundantly bedecked with them; bound in his hair, round his neck, wrist, waist, arms and legs, as well as for rings, snakes are his constant attendants."

The serpent appears on the prehistoric cromlechs and menhirs of Europe, on which, as stated in my paper on the Kamáon Rock-carvings published in the Society's Journal for January 1877, I believe, the remains of phallic worship may also be traced. What little attention I have been able to give to the serpent-symbol, has been chiefly in its connection with the worship of Mahádeo or Śiva, with a view to ascertain whether the worship of the snake and that of Mahádeo or the phallus may be considered identical, and whether the presence of the serpent on the prehistoric remains of Europe can be shewn to support my theory that the markings on the cromlechs and menhirs are indeed the traces of this form of worship, carried to Europe from the East by the tribes whose remains are buried beneath the tumuli.

During my visits to Benares, the chief centre of Śiva worship in India, I have always carefully searched for the presence of the snake-symbol. On the most ordinary class of "Mahádeo," a rough stone placed on end supposed to represent the phallus, the serpent is not generally seen.
But in the temples and in the better class of shrines which abound in the city and the neighbourhood, the snake is generally found encircling the phallus in the manner shewn in Plate VI, fig. 8.

The tail of the snake is sometimes carried down the yoni, and in one case I found two snakes on a shrine in the manner figured in Plate VI, fig. 5, 6.

In the Benares bazar I once came across a splendid metal cobra, the head erect and hood expanded, so made as to be placed around and above a stone or metal "Mahádeo." It is now in England. The attitude of the cobra when excited and the expansion of the head will suggest the reason for this snake representing Mahádeo and the phallus.

In several instances in Benares, I have found the Nág surrounding and surmounting the hump of the "Nandi" or Śiva's Bull. In such cases the hump is apparently recognised as a Mahádeo, as the remains of flowers, libations and other offerings were found thereon.

I hardly venture to suggest that the existence of the hump is the reason for the Nandi being selected as the Vahan or "vehicle" of Śiva. But the circumstance may be worth noticing. I am of course aware that the Bull is a symbol of generation and reproduction, traceable to its position in the Zodiac at the Vernal Equinox. But it may have been recognised as Śiva's Vahan, long before the honor was assigned to it of introducing it into the Equinox. And its position with regard to Śiva may have secured for it this important place in the signs of the Zodiac.

The snake in conjunction with Mahádeo is further to be traced in several of the metal specimens of the collection now forwarded for the inspection of the Society. In two small shrines, containing "Gapas" or assemblages of deities, of which the Mahádeo or Linga is the centre, the Nág or cobra can be seen to hold the chief position at the back of the shrine. In a remarkable bracelet purchased in Benares, consisting of a mass of Mahádeos and yonis, many of which are arranged in circles like cromlechs, the serpent can be traced encircling the phallus. It is again to be seen forming the handle of a spoon and surmounting the figure of Ganesha, Śiva's son, wherewith holy Ganges-water is taken from the cup, and sprinkled over the Mahádeo by pilgrims and worshippers at the shrines of Benares and other Śiva temples. It is seen again in the sacrificial lamp, used in the same worship. In the centre of the lamp is a space for a small "Mahádeo," an agate in the shape of an egg, brought, it is said, from Banda and the hilly country of the Nerbudda, rich in these pebbles, which are imported annually in large quantities into Benares. And the snake-canopy can be recognised again forming the back-ground of the shrine of the figure of Anna-Purna Devi, a form of Śiva's sakti Parvati. The snake is present again in a specimen where Śiva’s Bull or Nandi supports the Lotus, representing the female or watery principle, and within which is enclosed an agate egg (the jewel of the lotus?), representing Mahádeo or the male principle. Above this is a small pierced vessel which should contain Ganges water, to trickle through the aperture and keep anointed the sacred stone placed beneath it. The vessel or lōṭa is supported by a Nāg or cobra, the head erect, the hood expanded, forming the conventional canopy of the shrines of Śiva.

The serpent with the tree is to be seen on the canopies of shrines. In one case the shrine with a cobra-canopy has the Linga and yoni or Mahádeo complete.

Most of the other canopies, as I will call these backs of shrines, were purchased as old brass or old copper, and the deities belonging to them had perhaps long since been broken up and melted down. In some of them the tree, with the serpent twisted round the trunk, is very distinct. One of them has been figured by me in the annexed sketch, Plate VII, fig. 3. I was hardly prepared to find the tree and the serpent together in this form, in a shrine apparently used comparatively recently, if not in the present day, and I hope for some explanation of these interesting symbols from Dr. Rájendrálalá Mitra, or some other authority.*

The Bell, sent with the collection on which a hooded snake overshadows the figures of Garuḍa and Hanumán, seems, from these figures, to be adaptable for use at a shrine of either Vishnu or Śiva. Lastly, the brass models represent the cobra with head erect and hood expanded, the design somewhat elaborated and ornamented. Although, in one of them at least, there is no space for the Mahádeo, these Nágs are, I am assured, considered symbolical of life or generation, and as such are worshipped as Śiva or Mahádeo or the Linga or Phallus or whatever it may be called.

All these specimens were picked up in the metal bazar in Benares, where the fashionable trays, “specimen-vases,” and much Philistine work are now made and exposed for sale. In most cases the specimens were raked out with difficulty from among sacks containing old metal, collected to be broken up and melted down for the manufacture of the brass-ware now in vogue.

Although the presence of the snake in these models cannot be said to prove much, and although from the easy adaptability of its form, the snake must always have been a favourite subject in ornament, still it will be seen that the serpent is prominent in connection with the conventional shape under which Mahádeo is worshipped at Benares and elsewhere, that it sometimes even takes the place of the Linga, and that it is to be found entwined with almost every article connected with this worship.

* See Appendix, p. 31.
It might be expected that the Nág or Cobra would be seen at its best in the carvings or idols of Nágeshwar, the Cobra or Snake Temple of Benares. But in this I was disappointed; Nágeshwar, as I saw it, consisted of two temples, or an inner and outer shrine, the one called Sideshwar, the other Nágeshwar. In the outer or Nágeshwar shrine was a large sized stone Mahádeo, of ordinary construction without the snake on it or round it. The old woman in charge of the temple, the priest being absent, assured me that a snake had once surmounted the Mahádeo, but that the symbol had been worn away by much veneration. The story was most probably manufactured for the occasion in consequence of my manifest disappointment at the absence of the Nág.

A Bull or Nandi and a Cobra faced the Mahádeo. The contents of the inner temple were peculiar. The Mahádeo consists of a broad black stone in shape something like a tumulus. It is sunk some little depth below the ground, and is surrounded by four stone slabs forming a small square tank. There was no yoni with this Mahádeo, the tank perhaps representing the yoni. On the top of the Mahádeo had been traced, with some sort of white pigment, a circle with a central dot or cup mark, exactly similar in shape to the circles with centres noticed in my paper on the Kumáon Rock-markings. These marks are common enough at Benares, and are to be seen painted on the bamboo umbrellas which line the ghats and are also dabbed about freely on the walls of buildings. Further enquiry has confirmed the opinion expressed by me and supported by Mr. Campbell of Islay in my paper on Kumáon rock markings, that, whatever it may have meant in Europe, in India the sign \( \Theta \) means Mahádeo. There seems to be little doubt that at Nágeshwar the snake god is Mahádeo himself, or that he is worshipped under that name, and that Nágeshwar is a temple of Siva or Mahádeo in the form of a Nág or cobra.

These same marks were to be seen on a Mahádeo in a small shrine under a tree close by. In front of Nágeshwar were the graves of the Gosains of the temple. They resemble the graves of Chandeshwar in Kumáon, noticed in my paper on the Kumáon Rock Markings. The Kumáon graves were evidently the graves of Gosains of the Siva sect who I have since learnt are always buried, not burnt.* At Benares, as at Chandeshwar,

* Vide Tod's Rajasthan, Vol. I, p. 446. "The priests of Eklinga are termed "Gosain or Goswami which signifies control over the senses. The distinguishing mark "of the faith of Siva is the crescent on the forehead. They bury their dead in a sitting posture, and erect cairns over them which are generally conical in form. I "have seen a cemetery of these, each of very small dimensions, which may be described a platform had been raised above the grave, on the top of which were placed a Mahádeo and yoni. A representation of Siva's Trident and the soles of two feet, not unlike those figured in Fergusson's Eastern Architecture, were also noticed on the grave.

Our cicerone informed us that the feet were represented here in order that pilgrims might fall down and worship at the feet of the Gosain, who, dying, had become a saint and deserving of worship.

A visit in search of the snake symbol to the Nág Kuan, or serpent well, was rewarded with better success. The well itself is described by the Rev. Mr. Sherring in his "Sacred City of the Hindus," from which I may be permitted to quote the following passage:

"The Nág Kúan or serpent's well is situated in a ward of the city called after the name of the well Nág Kúan Mahalla, which adjoins the Ausán Gang Mahalla. This well bears marks of considerable antiquity; and from the circumstance of an extensive district of Benares being designated by its name, there is no doubt that it must be regarded as one of the oldest historical places the present city possesses. The construction of this well was, probably, nearly, if not quite coeval with the building of the Mahalla or ward itself, which, we may imagine, was described as that part of the city containing the well—the well being the most important and noticeable object there: and, so gradually, the inhabitants associated the Mahalla with the well, and called them by the same name. The ward is in the north-western part of the city, at some distance from the Ganges. The quarter lying to the east of this ward, that is, between it and the Ganges, is, as I have already remarked, in all likelihood, the oldest portion of the present city; and, therefore, the Nág-Kúan ward would have been originally in its suburbs. It is even possible that one of the first places built in these suburbs, and frequented by the people, was this well, and that its existence was one of the reasons, perhaps the chief, for the settling of a population in its neighbourhood. No person in Benares can tell when the well was made; but there is a reference to its existence in the Kasi-Khanda.

"Steep stone stairs, in the form of a square, lead down to the well; and a broad wall of good masonry, six or seven feet thick, surrounds them at their summit, rising to the height of four or five feet above the ground. Each of the four series of stairs has an entrance of its own. Their junction below forms a small square, in the centre of which is the well. De-

"as so many concentric rings of earth diminishing to the apex crowned with a "cylindrical stone pillar."

Now may not the circular tomb have represented the womb or yoni of mother earth, the corpse, which is to be born again to a new life, being placed in the position as in the mother's womb?
scending twelve stone steps you reach the water which is stagnant and foul. Beneath the water is a sheet of iron, which constitutes the door leading to a still lower well, which perhaps may be the old well in its original state. The stairs, I suspect, are not of great date. On the inside of those to the east is an inscription, to the effect that, in 1825 Samvat, or nearly one hundred years ago, a Rájá extensively repaired the well. It is possible he may have built the stairs then. Many of the slabs of stone of which they are composed display carvings on their external surface, some of which bear unmistakeable marks of considerable antiquity. These slabs were doubtless taken from dilapidated buildings in the neighbourhood. A thorough examination of them, especially of the more ancient among them, would, I am satisfied, be not unproductive of interesting results. The wall was also repaired by Mr. Prinsep about thirty years ago.

"At this well the Nág or serpent is worshipped. In a niche in the wall of one of the stairs is a figure representing three serpents; and, on the floor, is an emblem of Mahádeo in stone, with a snake crawling up it. The well is visited, for religious purposes, only once in the year, namely, on the 24th and 25th days of the month Sawan, when immense numbers of persons come to it, on pilgrimage, from all parts of the city. The women come on the first day, and the men on the second. They offer sacrifices both to the well and to Nágeshwar, or the serpent-god”. (Sherring's Sacred City of the Hindus.)

The well does not seem to attract much attention during most months of the year. I have often passed it and seen but few people there. In the dry season, there is little or no water in it. But the "Nág Punchami"—is a gala day at the well, and I believe at most Siva temples. The Mahádeo from the neighbouring temple of "Nágeshwar" is brought to the third step of the stairs on the west side of the tank surmounting the well, and Hindus of all classes come in thousands to adore the Mahádeo and bathe in the well, which, as the "Nág Punchami" Fair is held in July, or during the rains, is filled with water at this season. On the fourth step of the stairs above mentioned, are six circular holes, each 4½ inches in diameter and about 4 inches deep arranged in a row. Being always on the look out for "cup marks," I immediately noticed these holes, but the Bráhman in attendance explained that they were intended to collect the libations poured over the Mahádeo, and which trickled down from the gutter above. The same idea, Dr. Keller informed me at Zurich, exists in Switzerland, regarding these cup marks. And from a paper, recently received from the Society of Antiquaries of France, I learn that cup marks are frequently found on stones and slabs in the foundations and walls of old churches in the north of Europe. To the right of the spot where the Mahádeo is placed, three stone slabs or panels, apparently of great age, have been let into the wall. On one of these, two cobras standing on their tails (see Plate VI, fig. 7) have been roughly carved. On the next are two cobras intertwined in the attitude mentioned by Mr. Ferguson in the Appendix to his work on "Tree and Serpent worship." The cobras are somewhat battered, but the spectacle marks on one is still traceable (see Plate VI, fig. 4). The third slab contains a head, also much battered and weather-worn, which has been at one time surmounted by an ornament of some kind, possibly a cobra, but the form of which is no longer distinguishable. The heads of the twin cobras and of the human figure are all freely daubed with red paint, shewing their sacredness in the eyes of the Hindu visitors. The slabs appear to be very old and to have been collected from the ruins of some old temple.
ILLUSTRATIONS OF MR. H. RIVETT-CARNAC'S PAPER ON THE SERPENT SYMBOL.

To the left and some steps lower down, is a niche or shrine containing an ordinary Mahádeo and yoni with cobra twined round it as shewn in the sketch (Plate VI, fig. 8).

Behind on a tablet or panel, let into the wall, is the head of a cobra, roughly carved, and of the same character and style as the cobras above noticed. On a smaller panel to the right, two snakes are again represented intertwined, but shewing one twist less than in the pair previously noticed. Below the panel are the rough marks as shewn in the sketch (Plate VI, fig. 2) which may be either the remains of a rough inscription or perhaps of chisel or mason's marks. In two other places also was the twin snake symbol found. In the one case, the snakes are intertwined with apparently an egg between the two heads (Plate VI, fig. 3). In the other, the snakes are not intertwined and the egg appears to have been broken (Plate VI, fig. 7). These tablets or slabs appear to be of great antiquity. There seemed to be little doubt here, that the snakes were worshipped at the "Nág Kuán" as representing Mahádeo, and the act of congress, in which the snakes are represented as engaged, suggests the connection of these symbols with Siva worship.

Whilst on the subject of the snake well or tank, I would notice that snake wells are frequently found attached to temples of Mahádeo. I saw such a well recently in Kumáon close to the temple of Mahádeo, below the monoliths worshipped as representing Mahádeo, on the road between Almorah and Dévi Dhoora. A snake was supposed to inhabit the tank or well. I venture to throw out the suggestion, that the snake in the well may represent the post, or Mahádeo, in the tank, the well representing the yoni or tank as explained by Moor in his "Hindu Pantheon." The mysterious snake inhabiting the well is, of course, not confined to India; and Schwalbach, and other snake wells in Europe will suggest themselves to many.

Later I visited the Benares Palace of the Rajahs of Nágpúr situated on the Ganges and built in the palmy days of the Bhonslahs, and when a visit to Benares was frequently undertaken by some of the family or its chief dependents. In a shrine within the buildings, I found the Mahádeo represented by a cobra or Nág, the coils of which were so elaborately intertwined as to make an accurate sketch of the arrangement a matter of no small difficulty. Here the Nág is certainly worshipped as a Mahádeo or phallus. The much intertwined Nág is shewn in Plate VII, fig. 1.

The Palace of the Bhonslahs at Benares brings me to Nágpúr, where, many years ago, I commenced to make, with but small success, some rough notes on serpent worship. Looking up some old sketches, I find that the Mahádeo in the oldest temples at Nágpúr is surmounted by the Nág as at Benares. And in the old temple near the palace of Nágpúr, or city of the Nág or cobra, is a five-headed snake elaborately coiled as shewn in Fig. 2, Plate VII. The Bhonslahs apparently took the many-coiled Nág with them to Benares. A similar representation of the Nág is found in the temple near the Itwarah gate at Nágpúr. Here again the Nág or cobra is certainly worshipped as Mahádeo or the phallus, and as already noticed, there are certain obvious points connected with the position assumed by the cobra when excited, and the expansion of the hood, which suggest the reason for this snake, in particular, being adopted as a representation of the phallus and an emblem of Siva.

The worship of the snake is very common in the old Nágpúr Province where, especially among the lower class, the votaries of Siva or Nág bhusan, "he who wears snakes as his ornaments," are numerous. It is likely enough that the City took its name from the Nág temple, still to be seen there, and that the river Nág perhaps took its name from the city or temple, and not the city from the river, as some think. Certain it is that many of the Kunbi or cultivating class worship the snake, and the snake only, and that this worship is something more than the ordinary superstitious awe, with which all Hindus regard the snake. I find from my notes that one Kunbi whom I questioned in old days, when I was a Settlement Officer in Camp in the Nágpúr Division, stated that he worshipped the Nág and nothing else; that he worshipped clay images of the snake, and when he could afford to pay snake-catchers for a look at a live one, he worshipped the living snake; that if he saw a Nág on the road, he would worship it, and that he believed no Hindu would kill a Nág or cobra, if he knew it were a Nág. He then gave me the following list of articles he would use in worshipping the snake, when he could afford it; and I take it, the list is similar to what would be used in ordinary Siva worship.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF MR. H. RIVETT-CARNAC'S PAPER ON THE SERPENT SYMBOL.

1. Water.
2. Gaudh, pigment of sandalwood for the forehead or body.
3. Cleaned rice.
4. Flowers.
5. Leaves of the Bail Tree.
7. Curds.
8. A thread or piece of cloth.
9. Red powder.
10. Saffron.
11. Abir, a powder composed of fragrant substances (?)
13. Buttemah or gram soaked and parched.
15. Five lights.
17. Betel leaves.
18. Cocoanut, or nut.
19. A sum of money (according to means).
20. Flowers offered by the suppliant, the palms of the hands being joined.

All these articles, my informant assured me, were offered to the snake in regular succession, one after the other, the worshipper repeating the while certain mantras or incantations. Having offered all these gifts, the worshipper prostrates himself before the snake, and begging for pardon if he has ever offended against him, craves that the snake will continue his favour upon him and protect him from every danger.

The Deshpandia or chief Pandia (Putwari) of the parganah, who was in attendance with the Settlement Camp, also got for me the following mantra or verse to be used in the antidote for a snake-bite or to charm snakes.

श्री
ष्पमंत्रः

तत्क्रिकतुथँ चरणी बीर दंडाक्षोरचालां खंड खंड उखार चचे धनाजी ज्ञानी
बंकरा लमभी चारी नयेपरस्त चचे तत्क्रिका चङ्कलरंगां चंडावर्धांसिं लहनाच।
गवंते फड़ौन चीट बोट सामानीया भागवासाळुङ्क्षागधरकर पाल खाटभरी।
The village where I was encamped was rich in Tandáhs, mat-enclosures of betel leaf cultivation. The Barís who cultivate the betel creeper or Nágbali or Cobra creeper, as it is called, are, from their constant contact with the Nag creeper, supposed to be on terms of friendship and to have influence with the snakes, and are often invoked to assist in curing persons who have offended, and who have consequently been bitten by the snake deota or deity. Besides the mantra given above, a remedy employed by the Barís is, I was told, to slap on the mouth the person who brings the news of the accident! These Barís are generally snake worshippers, and as snakes are often found in the cool, well-watered and covered enclosures, in which the delicate creeper is grown, this desire to keep on good terms with the deity may readily be understood. I find too that I noted at the same time that those who worshipped snakes also worshipped the ant hills or mounds of earth thrown up by ants. The holes of these ant hills are held, correctly or incorrectly I cannot say, to be full of snakes. I should like further information on this point and would enquire whether the worship of ant hills may not be an account of their pyramidal shape and hence connection with Siva worship?

The “Nág panehmi” or 5th day of the moon in Sawan is a great fête in the city of Nágpur, and more than usual license is indulged in on that day. Rough pictures of snakes, in all sorts of shapes and positions, are sold and distributed, something after the manner of Valentines. I cannot find any copies of these queer sketches, and, if I could, they would hardly be fit to be reproduced. Mr. J. W. Neill, C. S., the present Commissioner of Nagpur, was good enough to send me some superior Valentines of this class, and I submit them now for the inspection of the Society. It will be seen that in these paintings, some of which are not without merit either as to design or execution, no human figures are introduced. In the ones I have seen, in days gone by, the positions of the women with the snakes were of the most indecent description and left no doubt that, so far as the idea represented in these sketches was concerned, the cobra was regarded as the phallus. In the pictures now sent the snakes will be seen represented in congress, in the well known form of the Caduceus or Esculapian rod. Then the many-headed snake, drinking from the jewelled cup, takes one back to some of the symbols of the mysteries of bygone days? The snake twisted round the tree and the second snake approaching it are suggestive of the temptation and fall? But I am not unmindful of the pitfalls from which Wilford suffered, and I quite see that it is not impossible that this picture may be held to be not strictly Hindu in its treatment. Still the tree and the serpent are on the brass models, which accompany this paper and which I have already shown are to be purchased in the Benares Brass Bazaar of to-day—many hundreds of miles away from Nágpúr where these Valentines were drawn. I am in correspondence with Mr. J. W. Neill on the subject, and hope to send some further information regarding the meaning of what may certainly be said to be these curious pictures of the Cobra. I shall be interested to learn how far their character may be considered by those, who are competent to judge on this subject, to connect them with the worship of Mahádeo?

I have now to state briefly the direction in which I would desire that these imperfect notes should be considered to lead. As the Society know, I have for some time past been endeavouring to collect information on the points of resemblance between the tumuli of India and the well known types of Scandinavia, of Brittany and of the British Isles. In my paper on the Kumáo Rock markings, besides noting the resemblance between the cup markings of India and of Europe, I hazarded the theory that the concentric circles and certain curious markings of what some have called the "jews-harp" type, so common in Europe, are traces of Phallic worship, carried there by tribes whose hosts descended into India, pushed forward into the remotest corners of Europe and as their traces now seem to suggest, found their way on to the American Continent also.

Whether these markings really ever were intended to represent the Phallus and the Yoni, must always remain a matter of opinion. But I have no reason to be dissatisfied with the reception with which this, to many somewhat unpleasant, theory has met in some of the Antiquarian Societies of Europe.

No one who compares the stone Yonis of Benares, sent herewith, with the engravings on the first page of the work on the rock markings of Northumberland and Argyleshire, published privately by the Duke of Northumberland, President of the Newcastle Society of Antiquaries, which is also sent for the inspection of the Society, will deny that there is an extraordinary resemblance between the conventional symbol of Śiva worship of to-day and the ancient markings on the rocks, menhirs and cromlechs of Northumberland, of Scotland, of Ireland, of Brittany, of Scandinavia and other parts of Europe.

And a further examination of the forms of the cromlechs and tumuli and menhirs will suggest that the tumuli themselves were intended to indicate the symbols of the Mahádeo and yoni, conceived in no obscene sense, but as representing regeneration, the new life, "life out of death, life everlasting," which those buried in the tumuli, facing towards the sun in its meridian, were expected to enjoy in the hereafter. Professor Stephens, the well known Scandinavian Antiquary, writing to me recently, speaks of these symbols as follows:
"The pieces (papers) you were so good as to send me were very valuable and welcome. There can be no doubt that it is to India we are to look for the solution of many of our difficult archaeological questions.

"But especially interesting is your paper on the Ancient Rock Sculpturings. I believe that you are quite right in your views. Nay I go further. I think that the Northern Bull-stones are explained by the same combination. I therefore send you by this post a copy of the part for 1874 of the Swedish Archæological Journal containing Baron Hereculius' excellent dissertation on these objects. Though in Swedish, you can easily understand it, at least the greater part, by reading it as a kind of broad north-English. At all events you can examine the many excellent woodcuts. I look upon these things as late conventionalized abridgements of the Linga and Yoni, life out of death, life everlasting—thus a fitting ornament for the graves of the departed.

"In the same way the hitherto not understood small stones with 1 or 2 or 3 or 4 etc. distinct cups cut in them (vulgarily called chipping-stones, which they never were or could be) I regard as the same thing for domestic worship, house altars, the family Penates."

I may note that this distinguished antiquary has adopted as a monogram for his writing paper a "menhir," round which a serpent is coiled, evidently copied from old Scandinavian remains.

Many who indignantly repudiate the idea of the prevalence of phallic worship among our remote ancestors, hold that these symbols represent the snake or the sun. But admitting this, may not the snake, after all, have been but a symbol of the phallus? And the sun,* the invigorating

* Since writing this I have come across the following remarks by Tod in his Asiatic Researches: 'The Suroi were in fact the Sauras, inhabiting the peninsula of Saurashtra, the Saurastrene and Syrastrone already quoted from the Periplus, and the kingdom immediately adjoining, that of Tassaristus, to the eastward. That the Suroi of Saurashtra, and the Syrians of Asia Minor had the same origin, appears from the worship of Surya, or the Sun. I have little doubt, we have more than one "city of the sun" in this tract; indeed, the only temples of the Sun I have met with in India, are in Saurashtra. The temple raised to Bāl in Tadmor in the Desert, by Solomon, where he worshipped "Bāl and Ashtoreth, the strange gods of the Sidonians," was the Bāl-nat'h, or Great God of the Hindus, the Vivifier, the Sun: and the Pillar erected to him "in every grove, and on every high hill:" the Lingam, or Phallus, the emblem of Bāl; Bāl-nat'h, Bāl-ćēsāri; or as Bāl-Isvara, the Osiris of the Egyptians; and as Nand-Iswara, their Serapis, or Lord of the Sacred Bull; Nanda, or Apis "the Calf of Egypt," which the chosen people bowed to "when their hearts were turned away from the Lord."

† Hence its name Bāl-beh, Bēsian idol: so Ferishta derives it, the idol Bāl. This, the capital in future times of the unfortunate Zenobia, was translated by the Greeks to Palmyra; for it is but a translation of Tadmor, or Tāl-mor, and can have an Indian derivation, from Tar, or Tal, the Date, or Palmyra-tree; and Mē, the head, chief, or crown.

‡ Čēsāri, a Lion. Hence the royal appellation of the Casars; and Lion (Sin'ha) Lords of India, have the same meaning.
power of nature, has ever, I believe, been considered to represent the same idea, not necessarily obscene, but the great mystery of nature, the life transmitted from generation to generation, or, as Professor Stephen puts it, "life out of death, life everlasting." The same idea in fact which, apart from any obscene conception, causes the rude Mahádeo and yoni to be worshipped daily by hundreds of thousands of Hindus.

In a most interesting paper recently read at the Society of Antiquaries of France, some extracts of which I am now preparing for the Society, the authors M. M. Edouard Piette and Julien Sacaze have actually discovered the remains of phallic worship still existing among the people of the Pyrenées, the existence of which in Scandinavia, in days gone by, has already been brought to the notice of the Society by Dr. Rájendralálá Mitra. These Archaeologists have established the fact that to this day the menhir is still reverenced in the Pyrenées as the phallus. And referring to certain cromlechs in the neighbourhood, M. M. Piette and Sacaze hold that the circle, and central stone represent the "Sun." The sun, they suppose, was the sacred symbol of these tribes, and they suggest that the tumuli and sacred places of the race, were raised in this form, just as we now build our churches in the shape of a cross and place the sign of the cross on the graves of our dead. Whilst I was writing these very remarks on the Kumáon markings, M. M. Piette and Sacaze were noticing the same points in regard to the tumuli of the Pyrenées. There are not wanting other remarkable points of resemblance between their paper and the Indian remains, with which M. Bertrand, President of the Society of Antiquaries of France, was much struck, and which induced him to send me, in September 1877, the proof sheets of the Proceedings of the Society. But the circumstance to which, in connection with the serpent worship of the above notes, I attach the greatest importance is, that I find that in many of these groups of tumuli, the circle is found with the serpent coiled round it.

"Thus Bál was the type of productiveness, and Ashtaroth, as destruction, most probably that of the Eight (Ashta) armed mother. A'shta-Tári-Devi', or the radiated Goddess of Destiny, is always depicted as trampling on the monster Bhainsásir, aided by her lion (when she resembles Cybele, or the Phrygian Diana) and in each of her eight arms holding a weapon of destruction: but I have ventured to pursue the subject elsewhere. I shall merely remark on the Suroi of Menander, that amongst the thirty-six royal races of Hindus, especially pertaining to Saur'ashta, is that of Sarweya, as written in the Bháká, but classically Suryaswa. The historian of the Court of Anhulwarra* thus introduces it: "And thou, Sarweya, essence of the martial races." No doubt, it was, with many others, of Scythic origin, perhaps from Zarúspe, or Bactria, introduced at a period when the worship of Bál, or the Sun, alone was common to the nations east and west of the Indus; when, as Pinkerton says, a grand Scythic empire extended to the Ganges. Here I must drop Apollodotus and Menander, for the history of their exploits extends no further than the Suroi."—Ted in Asiatic Researches.

* Nebraska of D'Anville and Renaudot.
May not this represent the serpent encircling the Mahádeo as now seen in India and in the form which during many centuries has perhaps not undergone any great change?

A further detailed consideration of this view must be deferred until I can submit to the Society the result of the enquiries of M. M. Piette and Sacaze, many of the points of which, in connection with the remains discovered in India, cannot, I believe, be considered other than most remarkable.

And I may add in conclusion that no one who has been in this country and who has noticed the monolith Mahádeos of the Western Gháts of the Himalayas and other parts of India, can fail to be struck with the resemblance that the menhirs of Carnac* in Brittany and its neighbourhood bear to the Siva emblems of India. I visited these remarkable remains when at home last year, and was quite taken aback by their resemblance to well-known Indian types. The monoliths of Scotland covered with what I believe to be "Mahádeo" symbols are of the same class. Added to this, in the recesses of the Pyrenees, the people whose language suggests their descent from the Tribes who erected the tumuli and menhirs, not only in this neighbourhood but also in other parts of Europe, still preserve traditions connected with these monoliths and have actually retained some traces of what I will call Siva worship. With this evidence, added to the points noticed in my paper on the Junapani Barrows and the Kumaon markings, the connection between the marks in India and Europe may then, I hope, be considered tolerably complete.

Appendix.

Note on the articles exhibited by Mr. Rivett-Carnac.—By Babu Pratap Chandra Ghosila, B. A.

It is interesting to observe how the ornamental and the artistic help in complicating the myths of the Hindu religion. The occurrence of the snake on several of the articles exhibited is ornamental in some and inconsistent with the Sástras in a few. The snake on the spoon or ladle is for ornamental purposes, and that on the bell is altogether out of place. The Sástras make no mention of the necessity of any such figures on the handles of spoons, sacrificial ladles or water-pots. In the case of the bell the only figure directed to be represented on a religious bell is that of Garuḍa, the bird-god. The Padma Purana has the following—"He is not

* I may be permitted to be egotistical enough to note, that Carnac, the surname which my grandfather added to his own, by sign-manual on succeeding to General Carnac's property, is the Celtic "Carnej," "Cairn," or collection of monoliths, for which the village whence General Carnac took his name is celebrated. The family crest, a crescent and dagger, bears an extraordinary resemblance to the markings on some of the menhirs.
a Bhágavat (worshipper of Bhagaván) in this iron age who has not in his house a conch-shell or a bell surmounted by a Garuḍa or the bird-god."
Such a bell as the above is used in the worship of Vásudeva (Vishnu). And although in the Śastraś regarding the worship of Śiva and Rámacandra, it is nowhere provided that the bell used in such service should be adorned with figures of the snake and Hanuman (the monkey-god), the vahanas of the two gods respectively, yet the bell-maker in his devoutness has added these figures to the bell, thinking that such a bell would serve the threefold worship of Śiva, Vishnu and Rámacandra. The white paint of sandal-wood paste on the lingam in the form of a circle or a semicircle and a dot, is intended to represent the sacerdotal thread (poïtā) and the mark (phontá) and, in the case of the semicircle, the half moon which is said to adorn the forehead of Śiva.

In the paper on Tree and Serpent worship published in Part I, No. 3 J. A. S. B for 1870, Ananta the serpent king is said to have a thousand heads and four arms. In the Briddha Baudháyana quoted by Hemádri, a Nága is ordinarily described to have five heads.

In the Visvakarmá Śastra, Anantá is said to have a hundred thousand heads, and the other secondary eight Nágas to have seven heads each.

A Nága is said to have hoods and the body of a man, the lower extremities being like those of a reptile. A sarpa or serpent is a reptile. The three-headed or the nine-headed snakes are imaginative figures; they have no foundation in the Śastrat. The figures of snakes forming backs of the shrines exhibited are evidently artistic and ornamental; they have no direct connection with serpent worship.

Cup-marks occurring in the vicinity of sepulchral monuments suggest their origin in the Smritis, in which it is stated that, after the cremation of the body, the son of the deceased is directed to offer water and milk, ṛṣi and ṛṣi, to the manes of the departed, and the water and milk are generally presented in unburnt clay cups, and it is not unoften that they are poured in little hollows made with the finger on the soft ground of the river side where the funeral ceremony is generally performed. May not the cup-marks on stone slabs represent these water and milk cups offered to the spirits of the departed?

The ant-hill has been known to be a resort of snakes where these reptiles have been seen to coil themselves up for comfortable and warm lodging. The eggs of ants and the queens of the same are well known favourite food of snakes.
Some Further Notes on Kálidásā.—By George A. Grierson, Esq., B. C. S.

In the April number of the Indian Antiquary for 1878, there is an interesting account of the traditions concerning Kálidásā current in Mysore.

The tradition in Mithilá, where I am at present, is somewhat different, and it may not be out of place to mention what I have gathered concerning Kálidásā in Bihár.

It will be observed that the two legends coincide in describing Kálidásā as being ignorant in his youth, and as acquiring his unrivalled power over the Sanskrit language by the special interposition of a deity.

According to local tradition Kálidásā was born at Dámodarpur, a village near the town of Uchait, and situated within the confines of the Madhubanú sub-division of the Darbhanga or Eastern Tirhút district.

As narrated in the article above referred to, he was left an orphan at an early age, and being destitute of means of support, he was, although a Bráhman, obliged to allow himself to be brought up amongst some low caste tribes, who tended cattle. He grew up so stupid, that even amongst his fellows he was considered little better than an idiot.

Now, there was once on a time a Bráhman, who lived in a certain city, who had a daughter (name unknown), who was the most learned woman of her age. She refused many advantageous offers of marriage, averring that she would only wed a man more learned than herself. At length her father, losing all patience, made a secret vow that he would marry her to the stupidest Bráhman he could find. So he went about searching for such a man; but could not find one, for ignorant Bráhmanús are rare in Mithilá.*

At length one day, he was passing through Dámodarpur, when he saw a boy, dressed as a gowálá, sitting on the branch of a tree, and cutting the branch at a part between himself and the trunk. The Bráhman looked, and the boy cut on and at last, when he had cut through the branch, fell to the ground along with it. The boy got up, much hurt, and expressed wonder at the result of his labour. The Bráhman thought that if this boy were only of his caste, he would be just the husband for his daughter. He made enquiries and found that his name was Kálidásā, and that he was a Bráhman, who, being left destitute, was supported by the charity of the Gowálás of Dámodarpur. After inquiring as to his stupidity, and finding the result of his inquiries satisfactory, the Bráhman took Kálidásā to his home.

* So says the legend. I only wish that, at the present day, there was some truth in the statement. The difficulty now is to find a Bráhman, who can do anything but fight and bring false cases. Experūn eredī; Tirthūtiyā Bráhmanús are the bane of a sub-divisional officer's life.
and introduced him to his daughter, as her future husband. The daughter, in order to test Kalidasa's knowledge, asked him if he was learned in Sanskrit. Kalidasa in his ignorance replied "ज्ञानेनानुचितं सेवनं," meaning, of course, "ज्ञानेनानुचितं." The daughter was highly offended at this ignorant answer and told her parent that he ought to have known better than to bring forward such a dolt as her future husband. But her father was not in the least taken aback and replied that, by saying as she had just said, she had shown her inferiority to Kalidasa in Sanskrit learning, in that she was not able to understand the excellence of the idiom with which he spoke,—"For," said he, "‘ज्ञान' means 'knowledge,' ‘नो' means ‘of us,’ i. e., ‘of me,' 'नासिक' means ‘there is not'; ‘सेवन' is compounded of ‘सा' and ‘दृव, of which ‘सा' means ‘Lakshmi,' and ‘दृव,' ‘like.' The whole phrase ‘ज्ञानेनानुचितं सेवनं' therefore means ‘I am not as learned as Lakshmi.'"* On hearing this explanation, the daughter was compelled to confess herself vanquished and agreed to marry Kalidasa. After the performance of the ceremony, Kalidasa hastened to meet his bride in the wedding-chamber; but she, being strong-minded, refused to allow any familiarities, until she had catechised him in the soundness of his knowledge of the Sāstras. Of course, poor Kalidasa was utterly confounded and so incensed his wife that she gave him a sound drubbing with a broom-stick.

He fled from the chamber and passed the rest of the night wandering about in a neighbouring wood, and crying with the pain of the broom-stick. In the morning he resolved to deserve his wife, by at least learning to read and write at a पाठसाला in Uchait.

He attended the पाठसाला regularly, but in vain. He was a bye-word amongst the pupils and an example of stupidity continually held up to the other boys by the gurū.

At Uchait, there is a famous Durgásthán situated in the midst of the jangal: and one rainy stormy evening, his school-fellows dared Kalidasa to visit it at midnight. Out of his innate stupidity, Kalidasa was perfectly indifferent in the matter of ghosts and readily undertook to perform the venturesome action. As it was necessary for him to show some token of his visit, he smeared the palm of his hand with ashes, that he might leave the impress of his hand on the image.

Now, it must be observed, that it is the custom in Mithilá, when any one has committed a grievous sin, for the people to smear his face with ashes and to parade him in this state before the town. Therefore it is a "yat para násti" insult to cast ashes on the face of an innocent man.

* I fear this story did not originally apply to Kalidasa, though I have heard it attributed to him. I have met it in the Purusha Parikshá, but no mention of Kalidasa is made in that version.
Kalidasa arrived at the Durgasthan at midnight, as agreed upon, and prepared to leave the ashy impress of his hand on the face of the image of Durga. No one but a fool would have dared to do this,—but then Kalidasa was a fool indeed. As he lifted his hand, the awful consequences of the action became evident to Durga, who foresaw that in the morning her own image would become the laughing-stock of all the country round; she therefore appeared before him in her proper form. Nothing deterred by this, Kalidasa was reaching out his hand towards the face of the image in spite of her entreaties, when to save her reputation she promised him any boon he might ask for, on condition of his abstaining. He consented and asked to be the wisest man in the world. She granted the boon, promising that he should know the contents of every page which he should turn over during that night, and that he should always be victorious in any public disputation in which he might engage. Kalidasa thereupon hurried home and spent the rest of the night in continually turning over all the leaves of all the books in his guru’s library. At daybreak he retired to rest, and while he was yet asleep the pupils arrived and sat at the feet of the guru for their daily instruction. No one took any notice of Kalidasa, as he remained asleep in the room, till the guru, while instructing, made a slip in his Sanskrit. Without awaking, Kalidasa instantly corrected it; and then all, being astonished at this precocity on the part of the fool of the Academy, joined in waking him and in demanding the authority for the correction. Kalidasa, on the spot, quoted the necessary sutra of Panini, a work which, till then, he had never read. The astonishment of all can be imagined, and it was not diminished when he described the miracle which was the source of his knowledge.

There is a story about Kalidasa current here, which is not unamusing. It runs as follows. There was a king called Sibay Sinh, the father of Rupnarya, who was renowned for his patronage of learned men. As he knew nothing himself, he invented a very simple way of judging the capabilities of the crowds attracted to his court,—he valued pandits not by their learning, but by their weight. The fatter and more unwieldy a Brahman was, the more he was honoured, and the greater the rewards given him for his learning. Before Kalidasa had made his name, he determined to attend at the king’s court. His friends dissuaded him, saying, “You will never succeed there, for you are small and lean,” but nevertheless he started, repeating the following verse—

कस्तो ज्ञेषणि वा न वा नरदेशः यदि कर्ष्ण कविभारतो ग्राणाति।
राति ज्ञेषणि वा न वा नवौष्णा यदि कैलीख्युष्यनुपाति॥

That is to say, “Whether a king presents gifts or not, when he hears a poet’s voice (he will certainly give); just as, whether a bride will admit a man to her embraces or not, (she will certainly yield) once she has set her foot upon the threshold of the room dedicated to amorous sport.’’ On the way he picked up a man of the Bhejiyar or shepherd caste, who was the fattest man ever known. Kalidasa persuaded him to accompany him and to pretend that he was the master, and Kalidasa only the pupil. He further instructed the shepherd on no account to let his voice be heard, promising to do all the talking himself. The shepherd agreed to this, and the two journeyed to king Sibay Sinh’s court. Kalidasa introduced the shepherd as his master, and the weight of the latter immediately told. He was rapidly promoted and soon became the chief pāṇḍit in the court. All this time he never opened his lips, Kalidasa officiating on all occasions as his mouth-piece; and probably the fact of his silence increased his fame, for the legend (unconsciously foretelling the story of Jack and his Parrot) says, that the king considered that as he did not speak, he must think a lot.

One day, however, the Bhejiyar forgot his instructions, and in a full Sabhā, in the presence of the king, while the conversation was about the Rāmāyana, he opened his lips, and pronounced the word Rāma when he should have said Rāvya.* The whole assembly was electrified at this one word of the Silent Pāṇḍit. The king to do him justice saw the mistake, but still it did not shake his faith in the weight of its utterer. So he pronounced the following question to the assembly—‘I have always heard other pāṇḍits pronounce the word as Rāma; and I have seen the Rāmāyana, and in it the word is always spelt Rāvya. How then does it happen that this pāṇḍit, who is the greatest pāṇḍit at my court, pronounces व as भ, and says Rāvya? Thereupon Kalidasa stood up, and on the spur of the moment repeated the following s’loka:

कुम्भकर्ण भक्ताराचिनि भक्ताराचिनि विभीश्चेष्यः।
रावणां कुम्भकर्णेऽराभणो न गुर्गुरणः॥

“Kumbhakarna (was a Rakshasa, and) his name contains the letter "bh," so does the name of Vibhishana. Rāva(bh)ana was the chief of the Rakshasas, and therefore his name should be Rābhaṇa, and not Rāvana.” This very lame excuse appears to have filled the sabhā with admiration for Kalidasa’s wisdom, and thenceforth his name became famous throughout the three worlds.

At King Bhoja’s court, the pāṇḍit who had the ear of the king was

* This is evidently an allusion to the local pronunciation of the lower orders. In my notes on the Rangpur Dialect, published in the Journal of the Bengal Asiatic Society for 1877, I have shown that similar changes to this exist in at least one provincial dialect of Bengal.
one named “Dallan Kavi” (दल्लन कवि).* This man was neither very clever nor very ignorant, but was only moderately learned (सम्बन्ध परिचय). By dint, however, of intrigues he had attained to such promotion, that no paṇḍit could approach the king, until he had been examined and passed by Dallan Kavi. Dallan naturally abused this power and introduced only the most ignorant paṇḍits to the king, sending all who were more learned than himself away, re ineffectá.

Kālīḍāsa wished to be introduced to King Bhoja: but, noticing that all the good paṇḍits returned home disappointed, while the bad ones were received into favour, he suspected the true nature of the case, and had recourse to the following artifice:—

He set out for Dhāra, where King Bhoja reigned, and on the way he met three poor ignorant pedagogues, who were bent on the same errand as himself. These three had put their heads together to concoct some verses which they might recite before the king, but their united efforts only brought them as far as the first half of a single anushṭubh, which was as follows:—

शस्यावद कविच दुः: सन्ध्यासिद्धान्तः।

This being interpreted means “Like a bone, like a crane, and again like a mendicant’s tooth,”† but they could get no farther. When they saw Kālīḍāsa, they asked for his assistance, and he replied by giving the second half of the śloka impromptu, as follows,—

राजत संज्ञ जे कौतिश्च श्रवणमहरीचिवत॥

the whole śloka then meaning. “(Bright) as ivory, or as the (snowy) crane, as the teeth of a mendicant, or as the rays of the autumn moon, is thy glory, O King Bhoja,” which incongruous display of metaphor immensely pleased the three poor paṇḍits. Kālīḍāsa then went on his way to Dhāra, and dressing himself in very mean attire called to pay his respects to Dallan Kavi. He took care, however, to call when Dallan was not at home; and repeated this every day for a week, during which time he made himself thoroughly acquainted with all the habits, customs and hours of his future patron.

After the expiration of the week Kālīḍāsa went again to Dallan’s house in mean attire, at a time when he was engaged in a ceremony usually performed apart from the multitude.‡ In spite of this, however, Kālīḍāsa

* So his name is pronounced and spelt now-a-days; a reference, however, to the S’ārdulā vikṛtiṇa verse later on will show that it was originally Dalana (दल्लन).
† A Sunyāst is not supposed to chew betel-nut and pān. Hence his teeth are not discoloured, but retain their pristine whiteness.
‡ नत्वसदे दल्लनकविच जायमिं मंता॥ forced himself into his presence and made a most profound obeisance. Indignant at the interruption, Dallan ordered him to leave the place, but Kālidāsa pacified him by a string of far-fetched compliments, and he at length condescended to ask the new-comer his business. Kālidāsa replied that he was a poor poet from the south, who did not know the manners and customs of Dhāra, and that he wished to be introduced to king Bhoja. Dallan asked if he had ever composed anything in Sanskrit. Kālidāsa replied, “a little,” and that he was prepared to give an example there and then. It was as follows:

\[
\text{रूढिया दुकरति नगर वने} \\
\text{पुषिवा गमि गमि लागु चकने।} \\
\text{सत्या कहत इस जिव कस्ने} \\
\text{स्नु चिनु जिव सोर कर बनने।}
\]

This remarkable composition Kālidāsa translated as meaning: “The cuckoo sings in the city and in the forest, and a woman keeps pounding sandal wood, and says I cannot bear my life. Separated from my beloved one, my heart goes pit-a-pat.”

To understand this ludicrous mixture of pedantic and ignorant mistakes some explanation is necessary. The following verse occurs in the Amarakosha, “चतुर्फिरियोऽपरमतो कौकिला पिक इत्यापि,” “the cuckoo is also (इत्यापि) called pika and other names.” Kālidāsa, however, represents himself as thinking that the meaning is that kokila, pika and ityapi are all synonymous terms. In इत्यापि there are three mistakes. Kālidāsa meant to say कौकिला, mistranslating it as “sings.” The verb क “to make” is marked in the Dhāturpāthas as “इत्यापि,” in which आ and आ are anubandhas or indicatory letters, which form no part of the root and only draw attention to certain peculiarities of conjugation. Kālidāsa, however, represents himself as thinking that only आ is an anubandha, and that “इत्यापि” is a ready made root of the first class meaning “to sing.” With regard to पुषिवा, the following verse occurs in the Amarakosha:

\[
\text{पश्चाते देवतरवस सन्ध्रास पारिभोतकः।} \\
\text{सन्तानं कल्पस्व पुषिवा चारीवन्नधे॥}
\]

That is to say, “Of the following five names of celestial trees, the mandāra, the pārijātaka, the santāna, and the kalpavrikshā are masculine, while the harihandana is optionally neuter.” Kālidāsa, however, took “पुषिवा” as being a synonym for “harihandana” or “yellow sandalwood.” The words “पश्चाते देवतरवस सन्ध्रास पारिभोतकः” are Hindi. With regard to तथा, the “विनाय संघीता तथा” of the Amarakosha led Kālidāsa to represent himself as saying that “तथा” meant “a woman.” The words “कच्च चस जिज्ञसा कस ने” are again Hindi. From “सु: पुसास: प्रका: पूजया: पुष्यया नर:” of the Amarakosha, Kālidāsa makes out that “सु:” means “a beloved one.” The rest of the verse is Hindi.
G. A. Grierson—Some Further Notes on Kālidāsa. [No. 1.

Dallan, after hearing this elaborately explained to him, came to the conclusion, as he well might, that Kālidāsa was a very poor pāṇḍit indeed, and that it would be quite safe to introduce him to king Bhoja. He therefore applauded the composition, and requested him to leave him, promising to introduce him after he had concluded performing the office at which he had been interrupted.

They accordingly started off to the palace, and on the way Dallan asked Kālidāsa, if he had composed any verse to recite before the king. Kālidāsa said he had one, and repeated the verse which he and the three poor Brāhmaṇas had concocted between them. Poor as this was, it was far better than anything that Dallan could write, and his jealousy was not appeased until Kālidāsa had assured him that it was not his own, but that he had got some one else to make it for him. It was then written down on a slip of paper, and they proceeded into the audience chamber. After the usual āśīrvāda the following conversation took place:

_Dallan_ राजा अम्बूदयेश्वर | दलीनके।
_King_ किं परिकाठार् | दंद्॥
_Dallan_ काव्ये | दंद्॥
_King_ कच्छ कवेर् |मुक्त्यष णितिनस्।
_Dallan_ लक्ष्यवतरी | एवं॥
_King_ राजेश्वरी | एवं॥
_Kālidāsa_ प्रथो॥
_किसिमाओऽरविन्दसुन्दर्धार् | एवं॥
_दारुं चामरानांकर्॥
_उद्वेद्त्वजविशिष्टम् भाषन=।
_कार: चार्य सार्थेन॥

That is to say, the king and Dallana were only talking prose, but Kālidāsa ingeniously turned the whole conversation into four complicated Sārdulavīkṛdita verses. The king was surrounded by a bevy of damsels, and Kālidāsa expresses himself unable to read his verse, being distracted by their charms. The translation is as follows:—

_Dallan._ O king, may you prosper.
_King._ Dallan Kavi, what have you in that paper?
Dallan. This is a poetical composition.
King. Of what poet?
Dallan. Of this ingenious gentleman here.
King. Let it be read.
Kālīḍāśa. I proceed to read. But first, let the wanton tinkling of the bracelets on the slender arms of these damsels, beautiful-eyed as lotuses, as they wave their chauṁris round thee, be stopped for an instant.

By this display of learning Dallan was obliged to confess himself conquered, and ever after Kālīḍāśa retained the post of honour near king Bhoja.

At King Bhoja's court, there were three pāṇḍits whose names are now unknown, but who are called collectively the three Śrutidharas.* Now, one of these three was such that he could repeat a composition when it was repeated before him once, another could do the same when it was repeated twice, while the third could do so when he had heard it thrice. In order to attract poets to his court, King Bhoja offered a prize of a ῥákḥ of rupees to any one who could compose an original piece of poetry. Numbers of poets became candidates for the prize, and recited their original compositions in the presence of the king and the three Śrutidharas: but always with the same result. Śrutidhara No. 1 exclaimed that the composition was an old one, that he had heard it before, and backed his opinion by repeating it, which he could, of course, do, as he had heard it once. Then
No. 2, who by this time had heard it twice, also averred that it was an old one, and also repeated it, and the same course was followed by No. 3, who by this time had heard it thrice. In this way all the poets were driven with shame from the palace. Kālīḍāśa, however, was not to be beaten, and going before the king as a competitor recited the following sragdharā verses.

राजन भो भोजराज ।
चिन्तुवनविदितनि ।
धार्मिकंकेष पिताभुतु॥

* A similar trio is met in the Kāthā Śorit Sāgara, (Introduction—story of Var-aruchi). They lived, however, at Pātaliputra, being patronized by king Nanda. The three were named Vararuchi, Vyāḍi, and Indradatta. The story tells how there was a brāhmaṇ named Varsha, who was an idiot. Kārtikeya, however, had granted him as a boon, that he should be endowed with every science, with this proviso, that he could only communicate his learning to a brāhmaṇ who should be able to acquire it all at one hearing. Vararuchi was such a person, and Varsha communicated his lore to him in presence of the other two. Vararuchi thereupon repeated it to Vyāḍi, who was able to remember a thing on hearing it twice repeated,—and Vyāḍi again repeated it to Indradatta, who thus heard it three times, and was then himself able to repeat it.
That is to say,—"Hail, King Bhoja, thy father was famed throughout the three worlds as a virtuous man. The ninety-nine krons of jewels belonging to me, which thy father took from me, do thou now restore unto me. All the wise men who stand in attendance on thee know this to be the fact,—or else,—if my words are false,—this poem of mine is an original composition, and thou must pay to me the proffered prize of a lakh of rupees." The three S'rutidharas dared not say that they had heard this before, for that would be tantamount to confessing that Bhoja owed Kālidāsa ninety-nine krons of jewels.*

Before Kālidāsa became wise, but after his marriage, his wife used to try and teach him a little learning. One day she tried to teach him to pronounce the word "उष्ट्रा" "a camel" (ushtra). But Kālidāsa could not form his mouth so as to pronounce the word, and at one time would he would say "उर" (ur) and at another time उष्ट्र (ush). His wife at length lost her patience, and after saying—

उष्ट्रा सुमाति रं वा घं वा। तस्मै द्वा विपुष्मिन्तम्य।
क्रि न कराति च एव विदिनः।
क्रि न कराति स एव विदिनः।

"He mispronounces ushtra with ra, and sha; and yet God has given him a round-limbed wife. What can He not do when he is angered, and what can He not do when he is pleased,"† she launched forth into words of no measured abuse. When Kālidāsa remonstrated with her on the foul-

* I have met a story somewhat similar to this in Persian literature, and much regret that I cannot lay my hands on it now. A comic version of the Persian tale can be found in Punch, Vol. II, January to June 1842, p. 254. It is called "Jawbrahim Heraudee."

† i.e. He must be angry with me, inasmuch as he has given me a dolt for a husband, and he must be pleased with Kālidāsa, for he has given him me for a wife.
ness of her language, she replied "नष्टम काम्या गति:। "What else is fit for one so utterly debased?" These words dwelt in Kālidāsa's mind and rankled there. After the miraculous gift of learning was given to him by Durgā, as previously described, before returning home, he disguised himself as a Vairāgi and, taking a dish of flesh food, sat himself on the edge of the tank where his wife usually bathed, and commenced to eat. His wife presently came up, and the following conversation ensued,—in the Sārādula-vikridita metre.

The wife. भिन्न सांपितिकोष ्कुरकवे।
Kālidāsa. चिन स्नेन मध्य विना।
W. सर्व चापि तच्च निर्याय।
Kā. दिगमस्या।
W. वाराणांभिः सच।
Kā. वेश्या अवश्यचिः कुतस्व घर्न।
Kā. चुनेश चार्येण वा।
W. चूतासांचेपिरंपरा अपि भवना।
Kā. नष्टम काम्या गति।

That is:—
Wife. Oh mendicant, are you eating flesh?
Kālidāsa. What is that without wine?
W. Do you also like wine?
Kā. Indeed I do, and women with it.
W. But courtesans expect money. Whence can you pay them?
Kā. From gambling and stealing.
W. So, Sir, you also gamble and are a thief?
Kā. "What else is fit for one so utterly debased?"

When the wife heard her own words thus hurled back in her teeth, she was ashamed and recognized her husband, and, taking him home, ever afterwards lived in due subordination to him.

There was a pis'ācha or demon who inhabited a wood in Dhāra, through which ran a much-frequented road. It was his custom to seize passers-by and to propose to them a question in the words "कौशक, कौशक, कौशक।" "koruk, koruk, koruk." As no one could understand this, the traveller was invariably seized and eaten by the demon, his worldly possessions being added to a pile of those which had been the property of previous victims. One day Kālidāsa had occasion to go along the road, and as usual, the pis'ācha seized him and asked the hard question. Kālidāsa understood it to be कोशक, कोशक, कोशक, that is to say, "who is free from disease?" repeated thrice. He thereupon replied as follows:
"He who stays at home in the rainy season, eats little in the autumn, eats his fill in the cold and dewy season, goes abroad in the months of spring, and sleeps in the hot season, is free from disease." The pisḍcha was much pleased at Kālidāsa's reply and released him, giving him all the wealth which he had levied from his former victims.

One cool spring evening when the south wind was blowing softly, and the mango blossoms were nodding on the trees, king Bhoja was walking in his garden, accompanied by Kālidāsa and Bhavabhūti. The king, charmed by the graceful motion of the mango blossoms, asked Kālidāsa to tell him why they waved so prettily. Kālidāsa replied:

‘It is evening, and, lo, I have come from Malaya afar; I would pass one night in thy house, O graceful one.’ When the newly blossomed mango tendril is thus addressed by the wind, she shakes her head, and says ‘Nay, nay, nay.’"

The king was pleased at this poetical description, but asked Kālidāsa, why the mango said "nay" three times. The latter dared not plead exigencies of metre, and being unable to give a plausible excuse, hung his head ashamed. The king then turned to Bhavabhūti, and asked him the same question. Kālidāsa’s famous rival, giving a different meaning to सुद्धी, which also means a woman who is not “चुंबन्ता”, explained that the three-fold repetition referred to the three days of uncleanness which precede the purificatory bathing: as stated thus in the Sudhī viveka.

"

There was a famous courtesan at Dhāra, who loved Kālidāsa and was beloved by him in return. She also admitted king Bheja to her favours.
The latter, however, she only allowed to approach her in pursuit of her calling, while Kālidāsa was admitted for pure love. For what will a woman not do for love? Does not the poet Vidyākara Miśra say as follows.*

"Lo, there are many bonds, but none like the binding of the toils of love. Even the bee, skilled as he is in cleaving timber, lies helpless,—bound in the hollow of a lotus."

And again does not the poetess Lakhimā Thakurāin say:—

(1.) "Ah! may I never love, but if I must,—let it not be with a wanderer; and if it be with such, may he be not be full of excellence; and even if it be thus, may my love be never broken; and if it be broken, may my life, which is not mine, be mine to cast away.

* The following verses are generally quoted by pandits when telling this story. As I have not noticed them in any of the usual Chrestomathies, I give them here.
(2.) "What are adornments, if a woman hath not youth; and what is youth, if she hath not perfect comeliness; and what is that, if virtue doth not dwell within; and what is virtue, if her beloved one doth not possess it too?

(3.) "My friend, a tender plant hath been planted by fate in the treacherous soil of thy heart. Cherish it jealously, for it beareth many flowers. Sprinkle it daily with the water of remembrance that it may not fade,—for that plant is love.

(4.) "Like the shadows of the fore and of the afternoon are the loves of the wicked and of the good. The first beginneth great and gradually fadeth away; but the second is delicate at first, and afterwards waxeth mighty."

One evening Kālidāsa was with his mistress, when they were interrupted by the sudden arrival of the king. Kālidāsa having no time to escape was obliged to hide himself under the bed, she cautioning him, as he valued his life, not to let his presence be known by either word or action. The king after his arrival, fancying himself alone with the courtezan, and wishing to pay a compliment to her beauty, laid his hand upon her bosom and addressed her as follows:

The whole couplet, containing a pun on the word कर, which means both "tax" and "hand," meaning—

King: "Verily, my fair one, thy breasts are like two monarchs of the world."

Kālidāsa: "Yes—for doth not His Majesty, who levieth tribute from sea to sea,* lay his hand upon them."

The king, in consideration of the neatness of the reply, forgave Kālidāsa's indiscretion.

The following verses show how poetically Kālidāsa used to do his marketing.

He went up to a pān seller and said:—

* A चक, is a tract of country running from sea to sea.
† Which may also be translated "pay tribute (कर) unto them."
"Give me golden-coloured pán, O fair one with the winsome eyes; and give me lime, O thou whose face is fair as the full fair moon,—and be quick about it."

Now it happened that the pán-seller was no other then Deví in disguise: and she, not understanding the tone of compliment which was followed so unceremoniously by a peremptory order, took it into her head that Kálidásá was mocking her, and, being a woman, took offence and ignored his request. But Kálidásá, nothing daunted, went on,—

“(and give me also) betel spice, for without it the lip of my fawn-eyed love will lack its lustre; e'en as her bosom doth when shorn of its necklace.”

Whereupon Deví, charmed with the sweetness of his language, appeared in proper form and gave him her blessing.

I have already quoted one uncomplimentary expression of opinion made use of by Kálidásá’s wife, with regard to her husband. Another runs as follows:—

"Even a beggar, who knoweth the whole law and the prophets, is better than a ruler of millions who is a fool. A fair-eyed damsel shinineth even in tattered weeds,—not so one who is blind, even though she is adorned with gold."

In the days of his wisdom Kálidásá often took occasion to playfully chide his wife for her former unkindness; as in the verses connected with the following story.

The husband and wife were taking a morning walk by the side of a tank covered with lotuses. The sun was rising, and the bells of the lotuses were in agitation, although there was no visible cause for their being so. The wife accordingly asked:—

Kálidásá replied—
She again asked—

Kaṭāyaḥ mṛdūnaḥ śrāṅgāṅkṣa vaiṣṇo ।

Kṣethro kāṁsi kampete lenn ṭeṇuna ॥ ॥

And he again replied—

Pṛṇaḥ avasam śrīvyaḥ bhur pramsarakaḥ ।

Tadākṣāraḥ nimṛṇte kāṃsiḥ vaṁśaḥ saṃśredh ॥ ॥

She. (1) "There is no current of air, nor can I observe the approach of any elephant. Why, then, is the water-lotus agitated?

He. (2) "The coal black bees have been clasped within its bells all night, and now they wish to see the sun. Therefore, my love, is the lotus agitated.

She. (3) "But bees and their kin can pierce the hardest wood, and the lotus bell is exquisitely tender. Why, then, does not the bee tear it forcibly open?

He. (4) "The lotus clasps him in her bell in love, and the bee returns her love. Therefore he does not tear the bell asunder,—for, my Love, he is not like thee."

The following verses in praise of contentment are universally attributed to Kālidāsā in this part of the country. They are excellent specimens of their style, and are worth recording here.
(1.) "He who has nothing wishes to have a hundred; and he who owns a hundred, desires a thousand, while the lord of a thousand wishes for ten thousand. The possessor of ten thousand would be a king, while the king desires to be an emperor.

(2.) "An emperor wishes to rule the gods like Indra, while Indra aspires to the power of Brahma. Brahma himself wishes to obtain the throne of Siva, and even Siva, that of Vishnu.* What being has ever reached the limit of desire?

(3.) "You have wandered over far and rugged countries, but you obtained no fruit: you abandoned your caste, and all your pride of birth, but your servitude was fruitless.

(4.) "You laid aside your pride, and ate like a crow,—fearfully, in another's house,—and yet you are not satisfied. To-day even your thirst dwells in vile and wicked actions.

(5.) "The bee deserts the fragrant jasmine and seeks the amaranth. Perchance he leaves it too, and approaches the champaka, and then the lotus.

(6.) "Imprisoned therein by fate and night, the foolish creature weeps. A fool may obtain discomfiture, but never contentment.

(7.) "Saints pass their lives enjoying roots and fruit. Elephants live on dried grass, and are mighty. Snakes quaff the wind, nor are they wanting in strength. Contentment alone should be the most precious wealth of man."

Much of the preceding is trivial, and, of course, none of it can lay claim to any historical value. My aim has been a very humble one, and I shall be happy, if I am thought to have only moderately come up to it. Even in a backward country like Tirhut, the old class of pandits is fast dying out, and is being supplanted by men with a smattering of English and Urdu, and only a moderate book-knowledge of Sanskrit. The older pandits acknowledge the change with sorrow, and say that even the women who most conserve the purity of the language, are beginning to use Yavani.

* Vishnu is appropriately placed last, as being absolutely निर्विद्य "free from desire."
words. Circumstances have thrown me much amongst these men, and I have taken advantage of this, to make an attempt to preserve some of the vast amount of unwritten lore, which is so fast being forgotten.

In this paper I have thrown into shape part of what I have collected concerning Kálidása: and if it meets with favour, and if time and health permit, I may at some future time give similar legendary accounts of other famous heroes and heroines of Mithilá. With regard to the verses sprinkled through the foregoing pages, my reading has been too limited for me to assume that none of them have been printed before. It must suffice that I do not remember meeting any of them in the usual collections of apothegms, and if my memory has betrayed me, I shall be the first to welcome my error being pointed out.

(Continued from p. 383 of Vol. XLVII, Part I, 1878.)

Nawīb Imām Khān, and the Confiscation of the Territory.

After Kāim Khān had been buried, the Bibi Sāhiba sent for all her husband’s sons, and dissimulating her wish to see Imām Khān succeed, directed Ahmad Khān to assume the leadership. Ahmad Khān, who had quickly penetrated her designs, gave a decided refusal. One after another, each son made the same answer. At length Imām Khān was selected and took his seat upon the masnad. He seems to have enjoyed little real authority. Although they attended to salute him no one presented any nazar; for months not a single kauri of revenue came in. After a time men ceased even to go near him, since he had no income from any source, by which he could assert his title.

When news of the defeat and death of Kāim Khān reached Delhi, many were deeply grieved and wrung their hands with sorrow; on the contrary, 'Abd-ul-Mansūr Khān Safdar Jang was rejoiced, and at once laughed and joked about the sad event. He then persuaded the Emperor that if he proceeded to Farrukhābād in person, the surviving Bangash leaders would be deprived of all excuse for not attending and submitting themselves. Even if they should refuse to obey and decline to deliver up their wealth, the result would be the same; they would be compelled to take to flight, and thus they would be extirpated from the imperial territory. The young Emperor, who was entirely subservient to the Wazir, agreed to all his plans.

At the end of Zi'\'l Hajj 1162 H. (November 1749), Ahmad Sháh marched from Delhi as far as Koll; and Safdar Jang, leaving the Emperor, advanced to Thána Daryáganj in Parganah Azamnagar of the Etá district, about thirty-five miles north-west of Farrukhábád.* He had with him forty thousand Mughals from Irán under the command of his relations, Mirzá Nasír-ud-din Haidar, Nawáb Sher Jang, Nawáb Işháq Khán and others.

At the same time the Wazir ordered Rájáh Naval Ráe to march to meet him without delay. This Naval Ráe, the Wazir's Diwán or Bakhshi, was a Saksena Káyath of the Chakwa and Parásma family, hereditary Kanungoes of Parganah Etáwah. He had risen by his own merits to be deputy governor of the Súbahs of Audh and Allahábád. He first was brought into notice by Ráfn Chand Banya, the Diwán of 'Abdulláh Khán and Husain Ali Khán (1712—1721).†

Naval Ráe, leaving the Sarkár of Lakhnau, marched towards Farrukhábád. On the 16th Muharram 1163 H. (15th December 1749), after Ráe Rám Náráyán had joined with 10,000 men, he crossed the Ganges. The day afterwards he moved to the banks of the Káli four or five kos distant,
The next day Naval Ráe and Nawáb Baká-ullah Khán crossed by the ford. and stood on foot side by side encouraging their men to exertion, the river being in flood, with heavy rain falling and a cold north wind blowing. Supplies were scarce and grain was the price of saffron. After a day spent in drying their things, the army marched to within three kos of Khudáganj, where the Afgháns were posted with a force estimated at 29,000 men and artillery.
Another march of one and a half kos was made, and hostilities were imminent. Mír Muhammad Saláh and Rájáh Pirthí Pat were placed in the van, Naval Ráe himself led the main body, while the left wing was commanded by Nawáb Baká-ullah Khán and the right by Ráe Rám Náráyán.
There were 25,000 horsemen, 100 elephants and innumerable camp followers; and the camp stretched for five or six kos as far as the eye could reach.
Negotiations were, however, opened and the Paţháns returned to Farrukhábád. On the 23rd Muharram (22nd Dec. 1749) Naval Ráe was at Khudá-

* One account says he camped at Súrajpúr, but I do not know where that village is.
† S-ul-M. 875, Hisám-ud-din, and Gaz. N. W. P. IV. 307. See also the Hadi-kat-ul-Akálím, third Clime, under Sarkár Lakhnau, as to the founding of Navalganj and Khusháganj. Under Itáwah it is stated that Naval Ráe was born at Khaksís (?)
He left a son, Khushál Ráe, who was subsequently naib of Allahabad under Asafud-daula.
ganj. The Nawáb Wazír was then reported to be at Kásganj, and there was some talk of investing Farrukhábád.

We now return to the events occurring at Farrukhábád. Although the younger brothers of Kháim Khán and many experienced chelas still survived, at first no plan was decided upon, nothing was undertaken. At length by the exertions of Shamsher Khán, chela, some men were collected and posted, as we have just seen, on the banks of the Kálinadi near Khudáganj, seventeen miles south-east of the city, thus barring the advance of Rájáh Naval Ráe. Kháim Khán, chela, was sent out in the other direction as 'Amil of Parganah Shamsbábád, with orders to take possession of the late Kháń Bahádur Kháń's property. Dáud Kháń, Sa'dát Kháń, Islám Kháń and other chelas patrolled round the city night and day. Meanwhile the Bibí Sáhiba and Imám Kháń prayed God fervently that the Emperor might not be led astray by the Wazír's wicked advice, nor take away from their family the territory of Muhammad Kháń Bangash, Ghazanfar Jang. To avert this calamity a friendly letter was prepared, and sent in a submissive manner to 'Abd-ul-Mansúr Kháń Safdar Jang. It reminded him that formerly, when a noble was slain in battle, his treasures were appropriated while his dignities were conferred on his children. They hoped, therefore, that the prayers of the widow would be heard, that a farmán would be granted pardoning all bygone offences, and confirming the maháls in the name of Imám Kháń.

From his camp at Daryáoganj the Wazír replied, that he had already presented a paper of requests to the Emperor, who had graciously signed an order conferring the territory on Imám Kháń. This order he had brought with him. There was, however, the condition usual in such cases, that they should appear in person in the camp of the Wazír, who was invested with full powers, and place before him a large sum by way of fine (nazarana) on confirmation. Should allegiance be professed in the way suggested, there was little doubt that the farmán would be carried into effect, the dress of honour conferred, and with it the rank and dignity held by the former Nawábs. There were other flattering and deceitful words; for instance, he said he had bitterly felt the loss of Kháim Khán, it was like that of a brother, it was as if his right hand had been cut off; but, please God, he would not leave a vestige of the Rohela seed in the whole of Hindústán. Suspecting no treachery, the Bibí Sáhiba believed in the truth of these promises, and began to prepare for departure to the Wazír's camp. A camel rider was sent to recall Shamsher Kháń and Ja'far Kháń from Khudáganj where they barred the way to Rájáh Naval Ráe. Instructions were also sent to them to engage Naval Ráe if possible in their favour, for he had the greatest influence over the Wazír.
By this time Rájáh Naval Ráe, seeing that without hostilities he could not continue his march, had despatched a letter to Shamsher Khán and Ja’far Khán, telling them that he was a well-wisher to the family of the late Ghazanfar Jang, and when he reached the Wazír’s camp, he would secure for them what they wanted without the slightest difficulty. The chelas, in the innocence of their hearts, believed these deceitful promises. Their readiness to listen to his proposals was increased on hearing that the Bibí Sáhiba intended to go to the enemy’s camp to treat, and quitting their position at Khudáganj they returned to Farrukhábád.

On their arrival the Bibí Sáhiba set out with her chelas for the camp. When she reached Mau all the Pátháns came out to meet her, and next day when she resumed her march, the Páthán commanders formed themselves into an escort. On arriving within three kos of the Wazír’s camp they halted, and when he heard of her arrival the Wazír sent out Sher Jang to meet her. On coming near the equipage of the Bibí Sáhiba he descended from his elephant, and standing in an attitude of respect, he expressed with tears his sorrow at the loss of Nawáb Káim Khán. He wept because he and the Nawábs were brothers by exchange of turbans. The Bibí Sáhiba said to him, “I count on you to replace Káim Khán, and in this time of trouble, I expect you to side with me.” Sher Jang swore by his head and eyes, that he was ready to give up even his life for her. The Bibí Sáhiba was then conducted to her encampment near that of the Wazír. Negotiations began through Sher Jang.

Shortly after this Rájáh Naval Ráe arrived. But, when he received audience of the Wazír, he did not act up to the promises he had made at Khudáganj. Indeed, he acted exactly contrary to his professions, and spoke nothing but evil of the Bangash family. This double-dealer, being trusted by the Wazír more than the rest of his servants, found acceptance for his evil words. From that time Sher Jang was set aside, and the matter was put into the hands of Rájáh Naval Ráe. He sent for Shamsher Khán, Ja’far Khán and others, and demanded that, before they began to talk about the territory and the revenue-free grants, a payment of one kror of rupees should be made to the imperial treasury. After a long altercation Shamsher Khán and Ja’far Khán stood on one side and held a whispered conversation. They then came forward and agreed to give thirty lakhs of rupees nine lakhs in cash and goods, the balance of twenty-one lakhs to be paid in three years, on condition that the Emperor’s farmán issued for the former territory, with the usual robe of investiture and a grant of the titles and dignities held by the former Nawábs. The Rájáh rose and said, “Be it so, I will report what you say to the Wazír, and in the evening I will inform you of his orders.” He then went to the Wazír and reported what had passed.
When they had consulted together, Náźír Yáḳút Khán was sent to the Bibi Sáhiba. She received him and touching his "nazur" remitted it. Directly she saw him she burst into tears, for he called to mind her own chela, Yáḳút Khán Khán Bahádur. Yáḳút Khán, having made a con-doling reference to the late Khán Bahádur, went on to deliver his mes-sage. The Wazír said that he would look on her as his own mother, that Ghazanfar Jang and Kháim Khán had been nobles of the highest rank, and that their successors should hold the same position. It was absolutely necessary, however, that she should make a payment of one kroër of rupees. Bibi Hajíáín, without consulting the Bibi Sáhiba and against her wishes, began to say that as the Bibi Sáhiba could not help herself she would give half a kroër, or fifty lakhs of rupees (£500,000). The Náźír then asked for a blank paper with seal affixed. The Bibi Sáhiba, without referring to Shamsheer Khán and Ja'far Khán, attached her seal to the paper and made it over to the messenger, who carried it off to the Wazír. Then the Wazír wrote out the sum of sixty lakhs of rupees. After this he told the Bibi Sáhiba to return to Farrukhábád, accompanied by Náźír Yáḳút Khán and Jugal Kishor, who were to receive payment of the money.

Rájáh Naval Ráe sent for Shamsheer Khán and Ja'far Khán and told them that they were responsible for the due payment to the imperial treasury of the sixty lakhs, which the Bibi Sáhiba had agreed to with her own lips. Titles and rent-free grants were promised to them in reward. The chelas went to the Bibi Sáhiba and complained of her having promised sixty lakhs, when they had already settled for thirty lakhs. The Bibi Sáhiba defended herself by saying is was Bibi Hajíáín's fault. There being no remedy the Bibi Sáhiba started for Farrukhábád with Yáḳút Khán and Jugal Kishor. All the cash in the treasury, the jewels, the ward-robe, the furniture of the rooms, the kitchen utensils, the elephants, the horses, the camels, the cannon, the cattle, everything they had, was made over to the Wazír's agents. The eunuchs examined each article, appraised it at half its value, and then from the total thus arrived at they deducted half a lakh of rupees. The sum allowed was forty-five lakhs of rupees. The agents demanded the balance of fifteen lakhs from Shamsheer Khán and Ja'far Khán; but they could only promise to pay the required sum within three years. The Náźír (Yáḳút Khán) then directed that the Bibi Sáhiba should set out next day for the Wazír's camp, where all he could do to intercede for her should be done.

The next day the Bibi Sáhiba with her sons and chelas set out on her return to the Wazír's camp. When she came to Mau all the Patháns visited her to pay their respects, and from that place joined her retinue. On reaching the neighbourhood of the Wazír, she set up her encampment. Next morning Shamsher Khán and the other chelas were sent for by Naval Ráe, and a demand made for the balance due. They were kept waiting till the evening with plausible words and the hope of a favourable decision. Meanwhile Naval Ráe went to the Wazír, announcing himself by a Harkára, of whom there were ten to twelve thousand employed as spies and messengers. Admitted to the presence of the Wazír, he reported in detail what had passed with Shamsher Khán and the others, and he also called attention to the large assemblage of Patháns in the Bibi Sáhíba's retinue. After this a messenger was sent to the chelas directing them to remain where they were that night, for their business had been put off till the next day. As a precaution against any opposition by the Patháns, Naval Ráe during the night, which was very dark, caused several guns protected by chains to be posted in front of the Bibi Sáhíba's camp. Then he sent to ask the Bibi Sáhíba if she had come to treat or to fight; if the former, he would advise her to send off to their homes the large body of armed Patháns who had accompanied her. The Bibi Sáhíba sent for the commander of each regiment (tuman) and ordered them to march back to Mau. They represented that being hereditary servants of her house, it was not right that, with their eyes open, they should leave her in the midst of the enemy's army, for their desertion would doom her to certain destruction. The Bibi Sáhíba's answer was that a wise man, after consenting to pay a large sum, should not raise further difficulties. The whole of the Patháns, unable to shake her resolution, marched away to Mau. There, to protect their families and property, they posted themselves outside the town in the mango groves, and remained on the alert day and night.

The Wazír, after having ordered Naval Ráe to keep Shamsher Khán and the four other chelas under surveillance, directed his march eastwards. When word was brought to Farrukhvábád that the five chelas had been arrested, and that the Wazír was advancing eastwards, the inhabitants removed with their belongings to the town of Mau, and hardly a soul was left in the city. When the Wazír with his army came near to Mau, Rájah Naval Ráe asked urgently for permission to burn it down and level it with the ground, so that not a vestige might be left. Although in his heart the Wazír approved of this suggestion, still prudence prevailed, and he replied that the Patháns were too many and too powerful to be attacked, and as they might gain the upper hand, the project had better be postponed till some more fitting opportunity. It was enough to be thankful for that the mother of Kám Khán, her sons, and her principal chelas had fallen into their hands. When the Wazír with his retinue drew near to Mau, he saw enough to convince him that what he had foretold was true, for all the Afgháns, whether infantry or horsemen, were drawn up on foot, with rockets, arrows, and matchlocks, ready to repel any attack. Without attempting to interfere with them, the Wazir continued his advance eastwards along the banks of the Ganges till he came to Yákútganj, some six miles south-east of the city of Farrukhábád, and there he encamped.

Rájah Naval Ráe marched through the town of Shamsábád, and on reaching the city of Farrukhábád, went to the fort, where for some reason he remained. When he saw the fort and buildings, he exclaimed—"With places like this they presumed to give themselves out for Báwan Hazáris (com- manders of fifty-two thousand); the fort is just like that of a petty zamin-" dar." He made other similar depreciatory remarks. Next morning he marched and rejoined the Wazir at Yákútganj. Then, like as the fowler scatters grain to lure the birds into his net, so the Nawáb Wazir entertained the Bibi Sáhiba, the five sons, and the five chelas with costly food, and furnished them with supplies of every description. Meanwhile he put off a final decision from day to day on various pretexts. Every day they looked for investiture with the khila'f, to be followed by dismissal to their homes. Several days passed in this way. One night the Wazir asked Naval Ráe for his advice. His opinion was that the chelas should be fettered, and that the Wazir should march for Delhi taking them with him. On his departure, Naval Ráe said, he would seize the mother of Kháim Khán and the five young Nawábs, whom he would send off to the fortress of Allahábád. The Wazir approved of these proposals. Next day the five chelas* were seized, and placed upon elephants. The army then marched stage by stage past Muham dábád† and through Saráe Aghat‡ on its return to Delhi.

After the departure of the Wazir, one day the Káyth sent for the five sons,§ and with deceptive words he began to extol the greatness, the glory, the bravery and the generosity of their family. Then getting up himself on some pretext, he said to an attendant in his confidence, "I will return in a moment, bring the dresses of honour for the princes (Sáhibzádas)." Having said this he went away. Suddenly Mir Muhammad Saláh, accompanied by a number of fully armed men, with iron chains and a blacksmith, entered behind the princes. Nawáb Husain Khán who was also of the Shia (Imámiya) sect, said to Mír Muhammad Saláh, "Was there no one else with this unbeliever, O Mír Sáhib! that you should accept this service; "it is strange that a man of your race|| should perform such an unworthy

* (1) Shamsber Khán, (2) Ja'far Khán, (3) Mu'kím Khán, (4) Islám Khán, (5) Sardár Khán.
† Thirteen miles west of Farrukhábád, on the Mainpuri road.
‡ In Parganah 'Azamnagar, about 26 miles west of Farrukhábád.
§ 1, Imám Khán, 2, Husain Khán, 3, Fáhhr-ud-dín Khán, 4, Ismá'il Khán, and 5, Karim dád Khán.
|| i. e., a Sayyad or descendant of the Prophet.
office; had we only arms by us, we should try first what our swords could do." Having said this, he stretched out his feet to be fettered, and each of the other princes, out of affection for his brothers, claimed to be ironed first. This indignity having been completed, they were placed in litters under guard, and forwarded to the fort at Allahábád. The news of their arrest spread consternation and despair amongst all the Afgháns.

By direction of the Wazír, Rájah Naval Ráe now took up his quarters at Kannauj, forty miles south-east of Farrukhábád, near the junction of the Kálinádi with the Ganges. This place was selected as being midway between the two Subahs of Audh and Allahábád and the new territory acquired from the Bangash family. Naval Ráe lived in the Motiya Mahal, built by the founder of the large saráé at Mirán-ki-Saráé, which he re-christened the Rang Mahal. Directly under his orders he had forty thousand horsemen. There were in addition the troops commanded by Nawáb Bağá-ullah Khán, Amír Khání Nawáb 'Aţá-ullah Khán, former ruler of 'Azímábád, Mirza 'Ali Kuli Khán, Mirza Muhammad Ali Kochak, Mirza Najaf Beg, Mirza Mashadi, Ağa Muhammad Bákír Yarmani, Mír 'Abudrat 'Ali Khán Dáípúri,* Mír Muhammad Saláh Miránpúri.† From Kannauj were despatched subordinate rulers (ámilis) and collectors of revenue (sázáwals) with orders to proclaim from lane to lane through all the villages the defeat and degradation of the Patháns. These agents, in their rapacity, acting even in excess of their instructions, began to levy fines from every inhabited place up to the confines of the towns of Shamsábád, 'Aţáepur and Kháimganj. The town of Mau alone escaped. It owed its safety to the number of Patháns inhabiting it, of the tribes of Bangash, Afridi, Toyah, Khátk, Ghilzai, Warázkai, Kochar, Dilázák, Khalil and Mahmand. These stood ready day and night to repel force by force, but they refrained from beginning hostilities, for fear of injury to the Bibí Sáhihí who remained in the custody of Naval Ráe.

It was arranged that Munshí Sáhib Ráe, an old servant of the Bangash family, who knew Naval Ráe before, should be sent to him. Being of the same caste and having already made Naval Ráe's acquaintance at Delhi, in a few days he managed to be admitted to the drinking bouts, which took place every night in the Rang Mahal after business was over. One night Naval Ráe got drunk, and knowing a little of the Shástrás began to talk on religion, boasting also of his bravery. Sáhib Ráe, pretending to be equally drunk, replied that all this talk was flatly contradicted by his acts, which were directly opposed to the Shástras. Naval Ráé asserted that up to that day he had done no act forbidden by the Dharm-Shástra. Sáhib Ráé said—"What direction of the Dharm-Shástra is this then, by which "you vex poor innocent women, if this is sanctioned by the words of any "saint or sage, then quote the passage." Naval Ráé denied that he had injured any woman. Sáhib Ráé at once seized the opportunity and said, "To-day I saw a woman in prison said to be a Paṭháni, I have heard she "has done no harm; where, then, are your pious pretensions, you who have "a woman and a widow in your custody. Even admitting she is guilty, "you are now in full and peaceable occupation of this territory, and keep-"ing the widow is quite unnecessary." Naval Ráé at the time thought this reasoning just, and, it being then midnight, he told Sáhib Ráé to go and release her. Sáhib Ráé replied that without an order in writing her guards would not let her go. Then Naval Ráé, stupified as he was, attached his seal to an order of release. Sáhib Ráé hurried to the entrance gate, showed the order to the sentries and gave them some money. He then urged the Bibi Sáhibá to lose not a moment, and she getting out her bullock rath started at once. They made such good speed that they reached Mau, a distance of sixty-one miles, in the space of nine hours, and when they got there one of the bullocks dropped down dead. At Kannauj, when morning broke, Sáhib Ráé forestalled every one by enquiring from Naval Ráé whether during the night he had ordered the release of the Bibi Sáhibá or not. When Naval Ráé replied that he had not done so, Sáhib Ráé produced the written order. He upbraided Sáhib Ráé for having tricked an old friend, but Sáhib Ráé retorted that he placed his duty to his salt before friendship. Naval Ráé ordered him out of his presence and despatched five hundred horsemen to bring back the Paṭháni. They rode as far as Nabiganj and the Káli river, but did not find her. The Káyth then wrote to the Wazír an account of her escape in which he screened himself as best he could.*

* Dáípúri is in Parganah Kannauj, it is the easternmost village adjoining the first village in the Cawnpur parganah of Bilhor.

† This Miránpur is, I suppose, the town in the Bárha Sádát of the Muaffarnagar district, 16 miles east of Khátauli. The 'Amád-us-Sá'ídat (p. 48), tells us he was a Bárha Suyyad.

The oppressions of Naval Ráé’s subordinates proceeded beyond all bounds, and the Afgháns began to concert together measures of resistance. A final outrage goaded them into revolt. One day a woman took some thread to the bazar for sale; and a Hindu in the service of Naval Ráé bought and paid for it. The woman took the money and spent it. A month afterwards the purchaser brought back the thread and wished to return it. The woman said she could not give back the price, nor was it the custom to give things back after a month. The Hindu used abusive language, she replied in similar terms; whereupon he took off his shoe and struck her. She began to beat her head and breast, and went to the principal Pāthāns, telling them it had been better if God had granted daughters only to Muhammad Khán, and she called down God’s curse on them, the turban-wearers, for allowing her, the wife of an Afridi, to be beaten with a shoe by a Hindu from the Kotwālī (police post).* Rustam Khán, a wealthy Afridi, and several of the leaders from each tuman went to the Bibi Sáhibā’s entrance gate, and told her that they would no longer submit in silence to the oppression of Naval Ráe. She asked their plans. They told her that if she would place one of her sons at their head to lead them to victory, they would attack Rájāh Naval Ráe. She counselled them to dismiss such idle thoughts from their minds, for how could she join them while five of her sons were in the fort at Allāhābād, and five of her principal chelas in prison at Delhi. When Rustam Khán and the others found the Bibi Sáhibā turned a deaf ear to them, they resolved on other plans.

* Life of H. R. R. pp. 36, 37. The last part of p. 36, and top of p. 37, is all wrong. Naval Ráé did not need to pass through Mau, nor was he waylaid at three hos from that place.

Naváb Ahmad Khán Ghálib Jang.

Ahmad Khán, second son of Naváb Muhammad Khán, during the lifetime of his elder brother, Káim Khán, lived for some time at Delhi. He had taken a farming lease of five parganahs, Sakrāwah and others, from his brother Káim Khán. Instead of remitting the revenue he spent it on a silver howdah, such as none but Káim Khán used, and caused a fan of peacock’s feathers to be waved over his head. Mahmúd Khán Bakhshi denounced Ahmad Khán to Naváb Káim Khán, and at his instigation a thousand horse were despatched to Sakrāwah with orders to cut off Ahmad Khán’s head. Having received word of their approach Ahmad Khán escaped to Rudain in Parganah Kampil, thirty miles north-west of Farrukhábád, where his father-in-law lived, and thence he made his way to Delhi, where he placed himself under the protection of Gházi-ud-din Khán Firúz Jang. When the war with the Rohelas broke out, he managed with the connivance of Firúz Jang to escape from Delhi at midnight, without receiving the Emperor’s permission. We have already mentioned the part he took in the campaign.

After the confiscation of the territory and the return of the Wazír to Delhi, Ahmad Khán lived in retirement at Farrukhábád in his house, known till a few years ago as the “Kacha Kila’” (the mud fort), near the Bihisht Bágh. He could barely afford to keep two servants and a boy Ramzáni, the son of an old servant of the house. Some months passed in this way, when one day in the month of Sáwan (July) fifteen men from Mau, each with a slave behind him, rode in at midday and dismounted. Ahmad Khan when he saw them was greatly perplexed to know what it meant. The Pathans saluted him, and he asked their errand. For fear of Naval Rae's spies, who prowled about the city, they said they had come to make some wedding purchases. The Nawab ordered food to be got ready for them.

* Amád-ús Sa’dát, p. 46, from line 2. Ahmad Khán was I believe at Farrukhábád, so I have omitted his name from this story, the scene of which is Mau.

The visitors then said they wished to talk to the Nawab in private. The two khidmatgars and the boy Ramzani were turned out, and the chain was put on the female apartments. The discussion endured for some five hours, during which Ramzani was called in to fill hugga after hugga. Whenever he went in, all the Pathans stopped speaking. From the sounds which came out through the doors, it appeared that the Nawab was maintaining an argument with them, to some things he agreed, others he disputed. It appeared afterwards that the Nawab had told them he had no confidence in them; as they had forsaken Kaim Khan on the field of battle, so would they forsake him. Then they put up their hands respectfully and pledged themselves never to quit him in the hour of danger, they would either conquer or die. The Nawab demanded an oath from them and they solemnly swore fidelity to him on the holy Kur'an.

A little before sunset the Pathans said they must go, there being little daylight left in which to make their purchases, and the next day they must return to Mau. They mounted and went away to the Tirpolya Bazar where each bought what he wanted. Naval Rae's spies and patrols challenged them, but they said they had come to buy cloth in the bazar. They were really Rustam Khan and a deputation of Pathans from Mau. They stopped the night at Ahmad Khan's and finally obtained his adherence to their plans. They then returned to Mau.

In a few days a messenger, Ghul Miyan, came from the Bibi Sähiba asking Ahmad Khan to come to Mau. Hiring eight kahars and having his old palki, the pole of which was nearly in two, tied together with rope, he set out for Mau. There he paid his respects to the Bibi Sähiba and presented his nazav. Apparently she had been talked over, and was now eager for an attack on Naval Rae. The only difficulty was the want of funds.

Rustam Khan Afridi, on condition of a grant of the half of any territory recovered, brought out all the ready money he possessed to the extent of some thousands of rupees. This money was divided according to their need among his brothers and the several commanders (Tumandar). Ten thousand rupees were sent to Nawab Ahmad Khan for his more pressing expenses. In return the Nawab conferred on Rustam Khan the dignity of Bakhshi, or Commander-in-Chief, and sent him a robe of investiture of seven pieces. A well-to-do Kúrmi, named Ghassá, of Chaloli, close to—Káinganj, was induced on receipt of a revenue-free grant of that village to make an advance of several thousand rupees. Some money is also said* to have been obtained by the plunder of a trader's house in a town sixteen kos from Mau, where seventy bags of rupees and one bag of gold had just been received from Lakhnau.

After some money had been collected in these various ways, the Nawáb set up his standard in the Moti Bágh in Chaloli. His force soon amounted to six thousand men, which rumour magnified into fifty thousand. Here the Bibi Sáhibá invested Ahmad Khán with a khilat as reigning Nawáb, and the Patháns presented their offerings. Ghassá Kurmi was sent to attack the Thána of Shamsábád, some five or six miles east of Mau. On the same day men, who were told off for the purpose, fell upon all Naval Ráé's thána and overpowered his men.

Nine days after the first rising Ahmad Khán brought out all his cash and placed it in a tent.† He then proclaimed by beat of drum that he who could not support himself would be permitted, after his third fast, to take from this money, if a footman, one and a quarter anna, if a horseman, three annas. To take more was prohibited; and those who were well off took nothing. The army, now swollen to some twelve thousand horsemen and twelve thousand foot, marched from the Moti Bágh, and in five days reached the Jasmain gate at Farrukhábád, where they halted near the house of Miyan 'Ali Sháh. The rains of Bhádwan (July—August) were falling, and as protection against the continuous wet weather, some put up mats, some reed screens, some blankets, and some sheets. There were some even who had nothing and camped in the open. Proposals to attack the Bambélás of Rashidpur, who had taken possession of some of the vacant forts in the city, were brought forward but rejected by the Nawáb. In his opinion there was no need of entangling themselves in such brambles before they had overcome Naval Ráé. The march was resumed and the next halt was at Amánábád, parganah Bhojpur, about six miles south of Farrukhábád on the Cawnpúr road.

Battle of Khádaganj and death of Naval Ráé.

A short time after the first rising, word had been brought to Naval Ráé at Kánnanj that the Patháns of Mau had risen and had surprised all his thána. Naval Ráé began by using strong language about stripping naked all those Patháns bakers (núnaz) and vegetable sellers (kunjąra) including their women; and he swore they should all be trodden to death under the feet of elephants. Then he ordered out his artillery and camp equipage, and marched westwards from Sháhábád—Kannauj, at the head of an immense force, with one thousand cannon of all sorts, large and small. He pushed on to the Káli river as quickly as possible, and crossing it pitched his camp on the left bank near Khudáganj, seventeen miles south-east of Farrukhábád and twenty miles north-west of Kannauj.* Soon after this, letters from the Wazir arrived, announcing his own approach and giving orders that till the two forces had joined, the attack was to be postponed. The Wazír's words were, that if any of the wild beasts, i.e., the Patháns, survived the battle, he would tie stones round their necks and drown them in the river, not one of their seed should be left alive in Hindústán. Naval Rae proceeded to carry out these orders. He caused a ditch to be dug round his camp, and posting his guns all round his entrenchment, he secured them to each other by chains. Heralds (naktíb) were sent to proclaim aloud from tent to tent the Wazír's instructions, and the army was warned that any one engaging the enemy would come under the displeasure of the Wazír and the Rájáh.

---

* 'Amad-us-Sa'dat, p. 46.
† Of the kind called Dáel-e-Khání, so made that, however strong the wind blows or however heavy the rain is, it will neither fall nor leak.

Meanwhile, on the Bangash side, at Rustam Khán's suggestion, Nawáb Ahmad Khán ordered a march eastwards. His personal troops were under the command of his son, Mahmúd Khán, then about fifteen years of age, and there were other contingents under Zu'llíkár Khán, Khán Sámán Khán, Jamál Khán, Muhammad Máh Khán, Bahádur Khán, Roshan Khán, Makhan Khán, 'Abd-ur-ráhím Khán, Biráhim Khán Káshmirí, Yár Khán of Dáipur and Mirzá Anwar Beg. There were also the following chelas of Nawáb Muhammad Khán, Ghazanfar Jang, viz., Háji Sarfaráz Khán, Ranmast Khán, Sarmast Khán, Námdár Khán the elder, Námdár Khán the younger, Sherdil Khán, Náhardil Khán, Jawáhir Khán, Salábat Khán, Hafízullah Khán, Bárá Khán, Páhár Khán, the five sons of Shamsheer Khán, two sons of Mu'ím Khán, 'Usmán Khán, son of Islám Khán, also Mahtáb Khán and Diláwar Khán Janábí. The Patháns encamped about two miles from the army of Naval Rae. The site of the encampment was, tradition says, at Rajepúr on the metalled road, three miles north-west of Khudáganj.

To reinforce Naval Rae, the Wazír had on the 27th and 28th Sha'bán (21st and 22nd July, 1750), detached a force of twenty thousand men under Nasir-ud-dín Haidar, Ismá'il Beg, Muhammad Ali Khán Risaldar, Rájáh

* The author of the "'Amád-us-Sá'dat" tells us (p. 47,) that to the Káli river are ascribed miraculous properties. When only knee-deep, if you beat the kettle-drums, it rises over an elephant's head. He offers the rationalistic explanation that the bottom is yielding, and soon gets trodden into a quagmire, so that any one afterwards crossing by the same passage would sink in.
Debi Datt, Faujdáir of Koil, and others. When Rájáh Jaswant Singh of Mainpuri* heard that this force had reached Sakí† he sent word of its approach to Nawáb Ahmad Khán, telling him that in one day it would reach Mainpuri, and unless he finished with Naval Ráe at once, he would be attacked both in front and rear. On receiving this intelligence the Nawáb sent for Rustam Khán and Sardár Khán Patháns and told them the news. They said they were ready. The Nawáb replied “To-morrow, putting our trust in the mercy of God, we must attack the enemy, and let events take their course.”

Ghul Miyan, a clever spy, was sent disguised as a faqir to reconnoitre the enemy’s camp. He found no place unprotected with cannon, except one entrenchment held by Sayyads of Báráh, which lay quite at the back of the camp, to the south, on the banks of the Kálinádi. Ghul Miyan returned to the Nawáb and reported that this place was guarded by five hundred matchlockmen only, but to reach it would entail a détour of three kos. He promised to conduct the Nawáb to the spot.

Accordingly, at three hours after sunset on Thursday the 9th Ramzán 1163 H. (1st August 1750), Ahmad Khán having ejaculated a “Bism-illah”, got into his palki and set out, followed by twelve thousand Patháns on foot and twelve hundred horsemen. Rustam Khán was posted on his left. Heavy rain was falling at the time. Ghul Miyan took them up to the right hand a distance of three kos, in order that the tramp of the horses’ hoofs might not reach the ears of the enemy. In this way the front of Naval Ráe’s camp was avoided, and they got round in his rear near to the Káli where was the position held by the five hundred Sayyads. This spot is said to have been on the boundary of the two villages of Kaithá and Gangni, about a mile west of the town of Khudáganj.

At an hour and a half before sunrise, Ghul Miyan pointed out to the Nawáb the Sayyads’ battery in front. The Sayyads heard the talking and said to each other, that it seemed as if the Patháns were coming to the attack, and they redoubled their vigilance. Then the Patháns made a rush, and from both sides matchlocks were discharged and swords used. The rain increased the confusion, for it was difficult to hear what one man said to another. An alarm passed through the camp that the Patháns had effected an entry into one of the entrenchments. At the time it was so dark that you could not tell friend from foe. Then the artillerymen began to fire their guns altogether at random, those on the west fired to the west, those on the north to the north, and those on the south to the south.

* Gaz. N. W. P. IV, 550. Rájáh from S. 1783 to S. 1814 (1726-1757 A. D.)
† In Parganah Eta-Sakft of the Eta district about twenty miles north-west of Mainpuri.
The Sayyads succeeded in repulsing the Patháns, who fled some distance. Ahmad Khán cursed them and cried out—"Have you brought me here only to see you run away, to-morrow your wives will be dishonoured and yourselves stripped naked." Then he drew his knife, intending to sacrifice his life, as he disdained to leave the place alive. Rustam Khán Afridi and other leading Patháns dissuaded him. The Nawáb replied that, since they had come to fight to the death, they must all dismount and precede him on foot, he should then know that they meant to slay or be slain. The Patháns consented, and they all dismounted. It is well known that when a horseman dismounts to fight on foot, the case is desperate and he will then neither give nor receive quarter. The Patháns made themselves ready by tying the skirts of their heavy plaited coats (jámah) round their waists, and taking shield and sword in hand, they advanced to renew the attack. Some of the Sayyads were killed, the rest fled and the battery was cleared. The whole of the Patháns thus made their way into the enemy's camp, and penetrated to Naval Ráé's enclosed tents (surícha) where the troops were few, the main body being distributed from point to point to guard the batteries. A messenger reported to Naval Ráé that the Patháns having driven back the Sayyads had entered the camp. Their weapons were now clashing at his own entrance door. As Naval Ráé never went out without saying his prayers, after hearing the report he sat down to worship, saying, "It is no matter, I will soon seize the whole of these vegetable sellers in the corner of my bow." The messenger came and made a second report, shouting out disrespectfully, "O you idiot! Here you sit while the Patháns cut down the enclosure to your tent." Thus urged to action Naval Ráé armed himself. Then he sent for and mounted one of the two elephants, which stood at his door day and night caparisoned with cloth of gold howdahs. He had two quivers full of arrows attached to his howdah and two bows. Putting two arrows at a time into his bow, he sent them at the Patháns, calling out "Már more sáre kunjron ko" (kill me all these vegetable sellers.) Fighting was still going on when the day broke on Friday morning, the 10th Ramžán. On this side Ahmad Khán was seated up in his palkí, protected by the Patháns with their shields, lest some bullet or arrow should hit him. There were fifty or sixty Kahárs to carry the palkí and one of them was wounded by a spent ball.

Rustam Khán and Muhammad Khán Afridi,* with one thousand horse and four thousand foot, had meanwhile come up to the spot where Naval Ráé was standing in a group of three or four hundred men, with six or seven elephants. They paid little attention to this small group, and advanced in search of Naval Ráé. They had gone only a few paces when a

* Amad-us-Sa'dat. p. 47, half way down.
Pathan of Naval Rae's escort threw a "hashpelai,"* calling out in Pashto, "O infidels! where are you going, are you blind, let no one approach, for "these are chiefs and leaders." They heard the "hashpelai," but did not understand the words. Muhammad Khan's brother, who had lately come from Afghanistan, translated them. Muhammad Khan ordered his men to ride at the group, while the footmen discharged their firelocks. Many of the enemy were disabled but the rest advanced. Then Naval Rae made use of abusive language, and said, "O you vegetable sellers! I will thrash you, "you scamps, step by step out of this country." As he spoke he let fly an arrow which grazed Muhammad Khan's chest. Taking the arrow in his hand, Muhammad Khan said, "O arrow of an impotent man! is this all "you can do?" When the other heard this, he fired a second arrow which would have been fatal to Muhammad Khan, had it not struck a youth near him in the neck, so that he fell off his horse. Then a Sayyad of Barha, Muhammad Salah, advanced and said, "Mahaрай! I do not say the Pathans "will deceive, it is not necessary to show mercy, let us do all we can against "them." He had spoken thus far, when a slave of Muhammad Khan's father fired off his piece, and hit the Sayyad on the forehead so that he expired in his howdah. Then one of the Afridis killed Naval Rae with a musket shot. After this the Pathans advanced and put many to the sword. The elephant driver, on seeing that Naval Rae was dead, drove the elephant into the Kali; it swam across and bolted with its driver to Kannauj. When the Rajah's army saw that their leader was killed or wounded and had retreated, they too began to give way. Thousands of horsemen and foot soldiers fled. Those who could swim or were well mounted escaped across the Kali; those who were poorly mounted were drowned. The victory was most unexpected both by the Pathans and on Naval Rae's side.

After the fight but before the kettle-drums had beaten the triumphal march, Muhammad Khan went to the quarters of the money dealers. In a small tent he found several fat bunyas playing at "champar." On seeing him, they said, "Come in, tell us, are the Pathans yet retreating, "or are they still where they were?" The poor wretches thought he was one of their side, for they never dreamt of Ahmad Khan having conquered. Muhammad Khan told them that Naval Rae was dead, far and near Ahmad Khan now ruled, and they had apparently been dreaming to remain in such ignorance. They turned pale when they heard the news. Soon after forty or fifty Pathans coming up wished to slay the owners of the tent. The bunyas in their fright said they had boxes of gold coins and rupees, which they would give up to be let go, they had been subjects of Safdar Jang and would be loyal subjects of Ahmad Khán. The Patháns proposed to get these boxes first, and then kill the men. This Muhammad Khán forbade. Then plunderers arriving from all sides, Muhammad Khán put the slave who shot Muhammad Saláh with several Afridis in charge, and took the Hindus to his camp. There he reported to Rustam Khán, who sent off three hundred footmen to guard the tent and bring away the boxes, in which there was a large amount of money.

* Called in Hindi "algose;" two races use them, Mewatis and Afghans; they are made out of a piece of cane or bamboo.—'Amad-us-Saadat.

Meanwhile an elephant of Naval Ráe's, with a gilt howdah and gold brocade trappings, had been found in the camp. The Patháns were about to slay its keeper, when with great presence of mind he drove his elephant up to Ahmad Khán's pálki, and making it kneel he congratulated the Nawáb on his victory and requested him to mount. The Patháns approved of this idea, and pushed the driver off with the ends of their sticks, thus sparing his life. At the time Ramzaní was holding the side of the Nawáb's pálki in order to steady it. The Nawáb ordered him to mount the elephant. He obeyed, and though not used to elephants, he managed to drive it off. Plunder of the camp then began, the Nawáb's orders being that elephants, cannons, tents and kettle-drums were his, the rest belonged to the seizer. The amount of plunder was so great, that several men acquired property worth as much as one lakh of rupees (£10,000).

In this battle, besides Naval Ráe and Mir Muhammad Saláh already named, 'Ata-ullah Khán* and many principal men lost their lives. The author of the “Tabsirat-un-názírin” gives the names of as many as thirty-seven Sayyads and Shekhs of Bilgrám in Audh, who lost their lives on this fatal day.

Nawáb Baḵáullah Khán, who had been summoned in great haste, had left Mákhanpur, about fourteen miles south of Kannauj, on Thursday the 9th Ramzan (1st August, 1750). That night he was at Kannauj, and next day, the 10th (2nd August, 1750), starting before daybreak, they had arrived within four kos of Naval Ráe's camp, when suddenly fugitives began to pour in. Ráe Partáp Singh, who had been wounded, was the first to report fully the disaster. Baḵáullah Khán halted for two or three hours, and thinking his force too small for an advance, he retreated on Kannauj in order to remove Rájáh Naval Ráe's women and children. With these, accompanied by the Rájáh's corpse, and such elephants and horses and other property as they could collect, they set out on their retreat. The fugitives from the battle-field followed them, among others Ráe Partáp

* Son-in-law of Háji Ahmad, the brother of Allah Wardi Khán, Mahábát Jang, ruler of Bengal. He had been Faujdár of Bhágulpúr and had held other appointments till having quarrelled with his uncle, he came to Audh.—J. Scott, Firishtá II. 343-351. Seir Mutaghérin, I. 458.
Singh and Husain 'Ali Khán, who had both been wounded. On the way all that could be removed was carried away from Bîthúr. On Saturday the 11th (3rd August 1750), they came to Muhsinpur, some five miles west of Cawnpur. Next day they arrived at Jâjmau, six or seven miles east of Cawnpur on the Ganges, and on the 14th (6th August, 1750), they were at Kânpur, a place five kos from Kořá. Thence the late Rájâh’s family was sent across the Ganges towards Lakhmâu; while Bâkâullah Khán took up a defensive position at Kořá.

The morning after the victory Nawab Ahmad Khán’s army had swollen to sixty thousand men, including the Sâhibzâdas, the chelas, the men of the Bangash clan, the traders and villagers of all sorts. When the Bâmâtelas, who had occupied the fort at Farrukhábád heard the news, they were alarmed and fled to their villages.

After the battle Ahmad Khán sent one of his father’s chelas whom he trusted, his name was Bhure Khán, with five hundred matchlockmen, to take possession of Kannauj. His orders were to occupy the fort of Naval Ráé called the Rang Mahal, and to take care of all the property. These instructions were thoroughly carried out. There were hundreds of thousands of rupees in cash, and a very large quantity of grain stored. Rahm Khán, chela, used to say that his father, Diláwar Khán, then very young, visited Kannauj a few days after the battle, and at the commander’s invitation he went into the Rang Mahal. There were no people in it, but bags of rupees and gold coins were scattered about. There were gold brocade curtains, the doors and lintels were plated with silver and gold, there was a jewelled bedstead with pillows of velvet, and the basons and covers were of gold studded with jewels. Diláwar Khán lived all his life on the proceeds of the things he carried away with the kîladar’s permission, and at his death he left a house and a pot full of gold coins.

Nawâb Ahmad Khán returned to Farrukhábád with great splendour. Sending for the Bibi Sâhibâ, his step mother, from Mau, he presented her with offerings. He sent out his parties to occupy posts (thánas) in all the thirty-three mahâls, and removed from Kannauj the whole of the property he had confiscated.

A local poet, Bhabutí Bhât of 'Ajaipur, parganah Kaimganj, produced the following ode on the occasion, for which the Nawâb gave him a village in náakár.

'Ajab wuh Sâhib-i-kudrat hai, jin-ne jag samhârá hai, Khudâ hai, pâk-maulâ hai, wuhi parwardígâra hai;
Khârâ bandah, kamr kâs-kâr, ghanîm upar liye lashkar
Lâgi uskí 'ajab chakkâr, gharârí ká khâmârá hai,
Naval se mard ghâzi ko na puchhî bût pâjí ko,
Naval se mard ghâzi ko pâhunch, golî se márâ hai,
Naval hadah se mukh morá, kahín háthi, kahín ghorá;
Kabul bhi kahín chhorá na sar cherú samhárá hai,
Chalen topán dhárádhar se, raahlí bhi parápur se,
Shutr-nálon tárátar se, takavvar ká pahárá hai,
Chalen tíren sans-sans, chali golf manan man man,
Káten bakr jhanan jhan jhan, parí talwár dhára hai,
Bhabuti nám hai merá, 'Aśtaipur men dera hai
Yihí hai mo-kákherá, tale Gangá kínárá hai.

Advance of the Wazir.

Shortly after the first rising of the Paštún, word had been brought of it to the Wazír at Delhi. On the 12th Sha'ban 1163 H (6th July, 1750), he marched out of Delhi and crossing the Jumna began his preparations. On the 27th and 28th Sha'ban (21st and 22nd July, 1750), he despatched troops under Nasír-ud-dín Haidar to reinforce Naval Ráé. On the last day of the month, a Tuesday (23rd July, 1750), he returned to Delhi and a second time took leave of the Emperor. He then marched with a large force of his own troops, some thirty thousand men under Suraj Mall Ját of Bhartpur, whom he had taken into his pay, and contingents under Nawáb Najm-ud-daula Muhammad Ishák Khán, Daroga of the Nazúl, Sher Jang, Mir Nasír-ud-dín Haidar, Mirza Muhammad Ali Khán Kochak, and Mirza Najaf Beg. Ismá'il Beg Khán, chela, 'Ise Beg Khán

His sister, in her old age so well known as the Bháo Begam of Faizábád, was married to Shuja-ud-daula, Safdar Jang's son. Najm-ud-daula, whose name was Mirza Muhammad, was the eldest son of Muhammad Ishák Khán Mútám-ud-daula (died 2nd Safar 1151 H.—5th April, 1741).

† Sayyad Násir Muhammad Khán, son of Sayádat Khán, the brother of Sa'dat Khán, Burhán-ul-Mulk.
‡ He and Safdar Jang had married two sisters, the daughters of Sa'dat Khán, Burhán-ul-Mulk. He was the son of Safdar Jang's maternal aunt.
§ This is the man who afterwards played such a prominent part at the Court of Delhi from 1771 till his death on the 22nd April, 1782. He left Shuja'-ud-daula's service after the assassination of Muhammad Kuli Khán, Naib of Allahábád.

His descent and family connections are shown in the subjoined table—

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Najaf Khán</th>
<th>Mír Saíd Muhammad.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Mír Saíd Ali.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>m. daughter of Sháh Suláimán.</td>
<td></td>
<td>m. to Mirza Muhsín, brother of Safdar Jang.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>m. Fátima Begam, full sister</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>to N. Muhammad Kuli Khán and daughter of 'Izzat-ud-daula Mirza Muhsin, elder brother of Safdar Jang.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Agá Muhammad Báqir Yarmani,† Mirza Mashadi Beg and Mir Na‘ím Khán.

After they had, in three or four days' time, reached two stages from Delhi, the defeat of Naval Ráé was reported. The Wazir flew into a great rage and cursed that vain-glorious drunkard for not having awaited the reinforcements, when it would not have been possible for those peasants, the Paṭháns, to have wrested a victory. Saying this he struck his hands in despair on the cushion on which he was seated, and then exhausted, dropping his head upon the pillow, he fell into extreme perplexity. Meanwhile Ismá‘íl Beg Khán who had been sent to reinforce Naval Ráé, having reached Main-puri, heard from his spies of the death of Naval Ráé, and retreating at once rejoined the Wazir's main army, which was encamped near the town of Márahra.‡

Execution of the Five Princes.

When the Wazir raised his head from his pillow, he called for a secretary, and directed him to write to the Shekh in command at the Allahábád fort, directing him on receipt of the order to put to death with every indignity the five sons of Nawáb Muhammad Khán Ghazanfar Jang who were in his custody. Another order was sent to the Wazir's son, Jalál-ud-din Haidar (afterwards known as Shuja'-ud-daula), then at Delhi, telling him to decapitate the five chelas, sending their heads to the Wazir.

According to the Wazir's orders, the stony-hearted Shekh, forgetting God and God's prophet, took with him several misbegotten wretches and went to the prisoners. When these beheld their murderers, Nawáb Imám Khán said to the Shekh—"O Shekh! after the death of Kháim Khán I was raised to the masnad, to kill me is your duty, but these four brothers of mine are quite innocent, you should postpone their death till the "Wazir's order can be repeated." The Shekh turned a deaf ear to this

---

* There is a Shuja' Kuli Khán _alias_ Miyan 'Ise, a chela, mentioned in the "Tabšírát-un-názírín" (year 1177), and in the 'Amád-us-Sa'dat (p. 88), who may be the same as this man.

† The Tabšírát-un-názírín (year 1177), names a Mir Báqir Yamani as one of Shuja'-ud-daula's leaders in the Bengal campaign of 1764.

‡ _Gaz._ N. W. P. 155. It lies 12 miles north of the head-quarters of the Eta district. The lithographed editions of both the "Siyar-ul-Mutákhárín, p. 875, and the Khizána 'Amíra" p. 80, give distinctly the name Márahra as the town plundered by the Wazir's troops on the 18th Ramzán (10th August, 1750). But Elphinstone, p. 650 (fourth edition) says it was the town of Báhrá, which might be treated as a misreading, had not Elliot, in his Supplemental Glossary (Roorkee reprint, 1860, p. 110), also stated that it was the town of Báhrá which was sacked by Safdar Jang's men. I believe Márahra, however, to be correct.
request. The executioners advanced towards the prisoners, and the Nawábs competed with each other as to who should first offer up his life. When all five had been slaughtered, the bodies were buried within the fort, and it was believed that the vows were granted of any one who offered a prayer at their tomb.*

Execution of the Five Chelas.

The Wazir's order to put the five chelas to death reached Jalál-ud-din Haider, the Wazir's son (afterwards known as Shuja'-ud-daula); and on the 20th Ramzan (12th August, 1750), he directed their jailor, Zain-ul-'Abidain, to bring them forth. He went to their prison with a palki and called out—"O Shamsher Khán! to-night the Wazir has ordered your quarters to be changed, and I have brought a palki to carry you." The Khán replied that he knew the place to which he would be taken, and requested that the other four might go first, leaving him the time for washing the corpse and for the funeral prayers. Zain-ul-'Abidain had a great affection for him, but was unable to show it. As requested he took away the other four chelas in the pálki. When they reached the place of execution, an order to despatch them having been given, the executioner forthwith separated their heads from their bodies.

Meanwhile Shamsher Khán bathed, put on new clothes, rubbed them with scent, and having said the burial prayers for his own death, commenced a recitation of the Kúrán. Then Zain-ul-'Abidain returned with the palki and said "O Shamsher Khán! arise and enter the palki." Placing his Kúrán in its cover, he presented it to Zain-ul-'Abidain, and gave him fifty gold coins to be presented for the table of Murtazza Ali through the hands of some Sayyad. He put aside his shoes as a gift to any one going barefooted. He made over his signet ring to his attendant, telling him to deliver it to Hasan Ali Khán, his son; and his own rosary, with a firán to hang round a child's neck, were for Sher'Ali Khán. Then barefooted he set out towards the place of execution. Zain-ul-'Abidain urged him to get into the pálki, but he refused, saying, that though many of his slaves had risen to ride in pálkis or on elephants, all earthly ambition for him was now over.

As he reached the place of execution, seeing the dead bodies of his fellow chelas, he exclaimed, "Brothers! I will soon follow you." Jalál-ud-

* The author of the "Amád-us-Sa'dat" (p. 45) pretends to throw doubt on the above story, but Hisám-ud-din says he had it from Sayyad Piyári of Gwáliyár, who was living in Allahábád at the time. The more popular version is that the five Sahibzádás were built up alive into one of the walls of the fort.
W. Irvine—The Bangash Nawabs of Furrukhabad.

In reply he recited these verses—

Hamán sher o shamsheer-i-burrán mán-am;
Cha sázam, kih kabza na dárud sar-am,
Wagarna tarú Khán o mánat ibrís
Bá-yak-dam tah-i-khák kardam ‘adam.

Having heard this answer, the prince said to the executioner “Behead him.” The executioner made a stroke but missed; and again a second time he missed. Turning to a Mughul standing by, Jalál-ud-din Haidar told him to finish the affair. The Mughul hesitated, but at length drawing, he made a cut at the neck and severed the head from the body at one blow. Still reciting the words of martyrdom, the corpse moved ten paces towards the Ka’ba and then stood still, the fingers of both hands continuing to count as before the beads of his rosary. The Mughul was amazed, and approaching the corpse, placed his two hands on its back, saying, “O Khán Sáhib! you are a martyr.” On these words being pronounced, the corpse turned to him and knelt. Then the Mughul began to weep and wail, saying, “O Jalál-ud-dín, the accursed! I knew not that this man was the greatest saint of the age, unjustly have you murdered by my hand this man without guile.” Then striking his sword on a stone with such force that he broke it, and rending his clothes, he fled into desert places.

The prince then caused the five bodies to be thrown into a well, and filled it up with stones. Next morning by the power of the Almighty there were found strewn on that well five fresh Chambeli flowers. Every day they were replaced by other fresh flowers. At the time that Ahmad Khán Durráni came to Delhi (1761), Nawáb Ahmad Khán went there accompanied by 'Umr 'Ali Khán, son of the martyred Shamsher Khán. One day his father appeared to him, and said—“It is now twelve years since I fell into a well here, take out my corpse and send it to Farrukhabád, there inter it in the mosque beneath the Jáman tree.” 'Umr 'Ali Khán got up crying bitterly, for at that time he was much hampered for money. He could hit upon no plan to procure funds. A few minutes afterwards, through the wisdom of the Causer of Causes, a money-lender, a friend of his, came up and asked why he wept. He repeated the dream, and that good man lent him five hundred rupees. Stone masons were set to work at the well, and when the corpse was taken up, the clothes looked quite whole, but were in reality all worn and fell to pieces. The body was put into a coffin and sent to Farrukhabád, where it was buried in the mosque beneath the jáman tree. The following verse gives the year of Shamsher Khán’s death—

Tárikh ba-guf hátif-i-ghaibe kih “núzdat Ramzán.” 1163 H.
Defeat of the Wazir.

After having remained a month encamped at Mārahra, the Wazir advanced eastwards and entrenched himself near a place called Rām Chatauni, seven miles east of Sahāwar and five miles west of Patiáli.* Suraj Mall with his troops was on the Wazir's right wing nearest the van, and Ismā'īl Beg Khán commanded on Suraj Mall's left.

On his side Ahmad Khán had sent urgent requests for assistance to the Paṭháns of Shāhjahānpúr, Tilhar,† Bareli, Aṅwālah‡ and Jaunpúr, in which last place some friends of his were settled. Ahmad Khán then marched eastwards with Rustam Khán Afrídí, who at that time had the chief direction of his affairs. The Nawáb proposed to Rustam Khán that, as both the Wazir and Suraj Mall were coming against them, they should divide their forces; and he offered to Rustam Khán the choice of attack. Rustam Khán replied that Nawáb should fight with Nawáb and simple soldier with simple soldier, he therefore chose Suraj Mall as his antagonist.

Early in the morning of the 22nd Shawád 1163 H. (13th September, 1750), the attack began by the advance of the detachment of Ismá'īl Khán, chela, and of Suraj Mall Ját with fifty thousand men against Rustam Khán Afrídí. On his left was an eminence, the site of a deserted village.§ Ismá'īl Khán and Suraj Mall occupied the foot of this height, and planted several guns on the top of it, the fire of which commanded the camp of Rustam Khán. He went off to the Nawáb and asked for orders to attack. Ahmad Khán wished the battle postponed, but Rustam Khán pointed out that delay was impossible, and the enemy being in force he must meet them. He got into his pālki and returned to his men, whom he drew out at once in order of battle.

When the order to advance was given, the Paṭháns by one rush carried the height, sword in hand, and captured the guns. Rustam Khán then discovered at a little distance a large force drawn out in battle array. He directed the attack to be continued. It was Suraj Mall's contingent under his immediate command. Suraj Mall called to his men, “You must not

* Rām Chatauni is not marked on any map to which I have access, but I believe it lies within Taluka Mohanpur. There is a well there which is believed to have existed from the time of the Vedas, and once a year thousands of Hindus assemble there to bathe.
† About 12 miles N. W. of Shāhjahānpúr.
‡ Fifteen miles S. W. of Bareli and in the Bareli district.
§ The authors of the “Laulī” say that the final struggle with Rustam Khán took place at Atranji Khem (see Gaz. N. W. P. IV, III.) But as it is 14 miles off as the crow flies from Rām Chatauni, and on the opposite or right bank of the Kāli Nādi, I think they must be wrong.
"fight these Patháns with the sword, at which they are expert, let fly your "arrows and discharge your firelocks." Saying this he withdrew to consult Ismá'íl Beg Khán and Rájáh Himmat Singh Bhadauriya,* who were stationed to the rear by way of reserve. They also were of opinion that the Patháns should not be allowed to come to close quarters, but that they should all three join to enclose them on left and right. They then advanced against Rustam Khán in a semicircular form, something like the shape of a bow.

They began their attack by artillery fire, discharge of matchlocks, and flights of arrows. Rustam Khán, who was brave as his name, got out of his pálki and joined his Patháns, with his bow in his hand. His arrows shot down several of the enemy. Then grasping his sword he advanced followed by his men, who had all dismounted. They despatched a number of the enemy, nor did they fail in any effort to win the day. They were, however, outnumbered, and Rustam Khán was slain with six or seven thousand Patháns. Suraj Mall and his companions pursued the remainder a long way in the direction of 'Aliganj, which is twenty-four miles south-east of the battle field.

Meanwhile, some kos to the right of Rustam Khán, Nawáb Ahmad Khán was engaged in contest with the Wazir. A messenger came and whispered to him that Rustam Khán had been defeated and slain. Allowing no sign of fear to betray itself, he turned with calmness to his leaders and cried with a loud voice:—"Rustam Khán has gained the day and has "made prisoners of Suraj Mall Jáí, Ismá'íl Beg and Rájáh Himmat Singh, * Himmat Singh Bhadauriya, son of Gopál Singh, succeeded his father on Jeth S. 2nd Sambat 1800, (1743 A. D.) He died on Jeth B. 6th Sambat 1812, (1755 A. D.) His principal forts were Báf and Pináhat in the Agra district, Ater on the right bank of the Chambal, and Bhind some sixteen miles beyond it to the south-east. The two latter places are now in the Gváliyár State. The family residences are now at Kachora and Naunganv, both on the Jamna in the Báf Pináhat parganah of the Agra district. The Rájáh's divân gives the following genealogy:

Himmat Singh (son of Gopál Singh).

Bakht Singh.

Partáp Singh (adopted son)

Sarnet Singh.

Mahindar Singh (adopted son)

(present Rájáh).

The Bhadauryas are said to be a branch of the Chauhans (Elliot, Supp. Glossary art. Bhudouria, p. 75.)
"he will win the palm for bravery from us, let us advance and make a like
"brave fight; we have the Wazir to meet, and if we prevail our name will "be great, if we fail, not one of us will be able to look a stranger in the "face." The leaders replied that, by the favour of God Most High and the Nawáb’s good fortune, they would soon show what they could do. Hearing these words repeated by the whole army, the Nawáb directed them to offer up a prayer. Raising up the right hand, they all called upon God for his blessing and made over their lives to his care. Then rank by rank they turned upon the foe.

When the two armies met in line, Nasîr-ud-dín Haidar, who was posted in advance on the enemy’s side with several thousand men, attempted to open an artillery fire. The advance of the Pathâns was, however, so rapid that little or no execution was done. When they came close, Mustâffa Khán Mataniya, who was famous among all the Pathâns for his prowess in single combat, challenged the leaders on the other side. Nasîr-ud-dín Haidar came forth to meet him. Drawing their swords, they began to fight; both fell from their horses, owing to the number of their wounds, and both expired upon the spot. The enemy, seeing that Nasîr-ud-dín Haidar was dead, gave up hope, turned, and fled. At this moment Nawáb Ahmad Khán came up to where Nasîr-ud-dín Haidar and Mustâffa Khán’s dead bodies were lying.

The want of success in the Wazir’s vanguard is attributed to the defection of Kâmgâr Khán Biloch, faujdâr of the environs of Delhi. Acting, as it is asserted, in collusion with Ahmad Khán, he made no resistance but turned and fled. When the Wazir perceived that his men were giving way, he hurried off Muhammad ’Ali Khán Risâldâr and Nâr-ul-Hasan Khán Jamâ’dâr, Bilgrâmi,* with his brothers, and ’Abd-un-nabi Khán, chela of Muhammad Ali Khán, with orders to re-inforce the front. Since, however, the panic of the Mughuls had become general, the efforts of the newly arrived troops were fruitless. Muhammad ’Ali Khán then turned away to their left wing, where three thousand foot were drawn up, with some horsemen behind them. When the Pathâns came to close quarters, Nâr-ul-Hasan and his brothers began using their bows, and the matchlockmen under ’Abd-un-nabi Khán fired off their pieces. They picked off many of the Pathâns, who were thrown into slight confusion, but soon recovered themselves. Their advance continued, Muhammad ’Ali Khán was wounded by a bullet on the right hand, and Nâr-ul-Hasan Khán’s elephant received five

* Nâr-ul-Hasan Khán was still alive in 1181 H. (May, 1767-1768), and serving near Arrah in Bengal, see Tâbsirat-un-Nâzîrîn under that year. sword cuts. In this encounter were slain Mír Ghulám Nabi and Mír 'Azím-ud-dín, Sayyads of Bilgrám.*

As soon as Nawáb Ahmad Khán reached the field of battle, the Mughuls discharged their artillery, great and small, loaded with spikes (gokhrú) and broken iron instead of balls. From the noise the earth trembled but the execution done was small. No one was wounded except Parmúl Khán, who lost the skin of one finger. From the spreading of the smoke the sky was obscured and for a time it was quite dark.†

Nawáb Ahmad Khán waited a few moments till the smoke had subsided, when he made a rapid advance through some dhák jungle upon the Wazír's entrenehmnt. The horsemen having dismounted drew their swords and preceded the Nawáb. By voice and by signs with his bow, he urged on the kahárs to carry his pálki speedily into the midst of the enemy. When the Patháns got near the guns, they fired their matchlocks and drove off the artillery-men, and the chains protecting the camp they cut with their swords or with axes. They now had got near to where the Wazír stood with a large force, and the Patháns began the attack on him with a discharge of musketry and arrows. The Nawáb at the head of the reserve came up and joined them. With his own hand he discharged his arrows, aiming at the Wazír, and the Patháns so exerted themselves with their swords that there was a general slaughter, and corpse fell upon corpse. At this moment a Pathán from Tilhar‡ in Rohilkhand came up towards the rear of the Wazír's position, and finding an action going on, sent a camel rider for orders. He was told to make his way towards the canopied howdah in which sat the Wazír; and the troops being few in that direction, where no attack was expected, the Tilhar Pathán, with his three hundred men, forced their way close to the Wazír and discharged their matchlocks.

The Wazír's elephant-driver was shot and fell to the ground; his companion in the hind seat, Mirzá 'Ali Naki, tutor of Shujá'-ud-daula, the Wazír's son, was wounded; and the Wazír himself received a grazing wound.

* The Miftáh-ut-tawárikh, pp. 497, 498, gives poetical taríkhs by Mír Ghulám 'Ali Azád, who also mentions them in the "Sarv-i-Azád." The father of the author of the Siyar-ul-Mutákhárín would seem to have been present in this battle. S-ul-M. p. 877, seventh line from bottom.

† The Khizána 'Amira, p. 81, says nearly all the artillery had been sent away with the van, but this does not seem quite borne out. At any rate this smoke from the artillery seems to be the explanation of the dust storm usually pleaded as a screen for the Wazír's defeat, see Life of Hafiz Rahmat Khán, p. 38, Hamilton's Rohilla Afghans, p. 163. First, a dust storm does not come in September, secondly, it would come from the West and would blow into the Pathán's faces, and so far be favourable to the Wazír, who faced to the east not to the west.

‡ In the Sháhjahánpur district.
on the neck, under the right jaw, from which he swooned and sank down in the howdah. His howdah was made of strong metal plates, and it was so high that when seated the head only appeared above the side, he was thus protected from further wounds. The Patháns, thinking the howdah empty and the elephant ownerless, passed on in pursuit of the Mughuls, who had by this time taken to flight; only Muhammad 'Ali Khán and Núr-úl-Hasan retained their formation, and rejoining the Wazír they asked for orders. He directed a triumphal march to be beaten by the drums, but except some two hundred men, not a soul rallied to his support. Night now approaching, Jagat Náráyan, brother of Lachmi Náráyan, took the place on the elephant of the dead mahaut; and the Wazír reluctantly withdrew from the field towards Márahra.

Soon after his withdrawal, Suraj Mall Ját, Ismá’íl Beg and Rájáh Himmat Singh, having completed the defeat and dispersion of Rustam Khán Afrídí’s troops, were returning with exultation to rejoin the Wazír. Nawáb Ahmad Khán with only a few men was in occupation of the Wazír’s camp. When he saw this large force advancing, he became very anxious and turned his face to the Great Helper and prayed, saying, “O God! preserve this sinful slave from calamity.” It was not long before the three leaders received reports of the repulse of the Wazír. Their joy being changed into fear and trembling, they turned and marched off towards Delhi, and Nawáb Ahmad Khán offered up thanks to heaven. Meanwhile those who had pursued the Wazír’s retreating troops, had come up on the road with Nawáb Ishák Khán, who cried out boldly, “I am 'Abd-ul-Mansúr Khán.” Believing his words, the Patháns surrounded the elephant, and seizing the Nawáb, cut off his head. They brought it and threw it at the feet of Nawáb Ahmad Khán, saying, “Here is the head of the Wazír.” Looking at it the Nawáb saw it was the head of Ishák Khán, not that of the Wazír.

The night after the battle was spent by the Wazír at Márahra, twenty-one miles west of the field, and there his wound was dressed. On the 29th Shawál (20th September, 1750), he re-entered Delhi and repaired secretly to his house. Through the intrigues of the Emperor’s favourite, Jáwed Khán, it had been already proposed to confiscate Safdar Jang’s estate and to appoint in his place Intízám-ud-daula, Khán Kháñán, a son of the late Wazír, Kamr-ud-din Khán ‘Itimád-ud-daula. On hearing of the defeat and disgrace of Safdar Jang, the Emperor consulted Gházi-ud-din Khán, Fírúz Jang, son of Nizám-ul-mulk, as to what should be done if Ahmad Khán advanced to Delhi. After obtaining permission to speak his mind freely, Fírúz Jang stated the case at great length, dwelling on the good services of the Bangash family and the treachery they had met with from the Wazír. He concluded by desiring the Emperor to decide who, in justice, was in fault. The Emperor admitted that what Firúz Jang said was true, that Muhammad Khán Ghazanfar Jang and his family had done the throne no wrong, that Safdar Jang's conduct could not be defended. But if Ahmad Khán followed up his advantage and pursued Safdar Jang to Delhi, what should be done? Firúz Jang proposed sending a farmán, with a robe of honour, elephant, horse and sword to Ahmad Khán, at the same time stating that what had been done had not been done with the Emperor's consent. Safdar Jang had no more than reaped the fruit of his own ill-deeds, but Ahmad Khán, if he were a loyal subject should, instead of advancing further towards Delhi, return to Farrukhábád. This advice approved itself to the Emperor, a farmán and robe of honour were sent, and on receiving them, Ahmad Khán turned and went back to Farrukhábád.

Shádil Khán, brother's son of Shuj'at Khán Ghilzai,* was left with some ten thousand men under subordinate leaders, in charge of that part of the country, it having been formerly under his uncle, Shuj'at Khán.† Naváb Ahmad Khán himself then returned to his home at Farrukhábád. For the due administration of the recovered territory, he appointed his brothers and relations to be governors of various places. Naváb Murtazza Khán, fourth son of Muhammad Khán, was sent to Itáwah; Mansúr 'Ali Khán, thirteenth son, to Phaphond, including the jágir maháls of Sauríkh, Sakatpur, Sakráwah, and Sauj; 'Azim Khán, twenty-first son, to Shikohábád, including Sakít, Kuráolí and 'Alipur Khera; Naváž Khán Khátká to Ákbarpur-Sháhpur; Zu'l-fikár Khán, chela, alias the Majhle Nawáb, to Shamshábád and Chibramau, including Sikandarpur, Bhonganw and Birwar (or Bewar); Manavar Khán, eighteenth son, to Páí and Sándí; and Khudá Bandah Khán, twelfth son, was made Fauljár of Bilgrám. Naváb Mahmúd Khán, eldest son of Naváž Ahmad Khán, with Jahán Khán, an old chela of the family, at the head of ten thousand horse and a large force of infantry, was deputed to take possession of Lakhnau and the Súbah of Audh.‡ At the same time Shádil Khán, the sixteenth son, with the assistance of Káli Khán son of Shamsher Khán, chela, was ordered to advance to Koár—Jahánábád, in the Súbah of Alláhábád; and Muhammad Amír Khán, nineteenth son, was sent to occupy Ghazipur. The Rohelas on their side§ sent Shekh Kabír, Par-† Gaz. N. W. P. IV, 158, Shuj'at Khán built at Máráhra the tomb of Sháh Bar-kat-ullah in 1142 H. (July 1729—July 1730).

‡ The Khizána 'Azíra, p. 83, must either be wrong in the date (Jamádí I, 1164 H.) given for Mahmúd Khán's passing through Bilgrám, or else it must refer to something which happened on the retreat from Alláhábád to Farrukhábád, which did take place about Jamádí I, 1164. It is absurd to suppose that Aúd was not occupied till six or seven months after the victory of Rám Chatauni.
1879.]

W. Irvine—The Bangash Nâwâb of Farrukhâbâd.

mul Khân, and other leaders with their respective contingents to Shâhâbâd and Khairâbâd, of which parganas they took quiet possession. The death and defeat of Naval Râc had thrown the greater part of the Allahâbâd Subah into confusion; Rûp Singh Khîchar, who held pargana Karâli (now in the Allahâbâd district), Sumer Singh, son of Hindû Singh Chandela, and Ganshâm Singh Ragbansi, all old friends of the Pathâns, entered into a league with the Mahârattas, and as they had done the year before, wished to call them across the river.

By the mouth of Zîl-ka’d (Sept.—Oct. 1750), the Pathâns had put a thana in Malihâbâd, 15 miles west of Lakhnau, had raised a disturbance in Sândi, (in the Hardoi district) had invested Amethi (in the Sultânpur district), and with a large force were threatening Dâlmâu, on the Ganges, and Râe Bareli itself.

It is reported that after the victory Nawâb Ahmad Khân used often to say to the Biblí Sâhiba—“God the Almighty has granted me a double triumph, for I have not only defeated ’Abd-ul-Mansûr Khân, but I am rid of Rustam Khân Afrídî, who had a claim to half my territory.” The Nawâb referred to the compact made before the attack on Naval Râc, by which Rustam Khân had stipulated for half the nawâbi in return for the money then advanced.

Siege of Allahâbâd Fort.

(September, 1750—April, 1751.)

Nawâb Ahmad Khân after having made all his arrangements went in person to Kannauj. Hearing of his approach Nawâb Baḵâ-ullah Khân, Khân ’Alam, Amîr Khânî* and Râe Partâp Nárâyân,† officers in the Wazîr’s

* He was the son of Marahmat Khân, son of Amîr Khân ’Alamgîrî, his uncle being the well known Amîr Khân ’Umdat-ul-Mulik, whom we mentioned at p. 338, Vol. XLVII, 1878.

† The family tree of this family is given thus in the Amâd us-Sâdat, p. 56. copying from the Hadîkat-ul-Âkâïlîn.

Atmâ Rám Khatri. (born near Lâbor, Diwán to Sa’dat Khân when Faujdar of Hindaun and Bayând).

| Har Nárâyân (Wâkil of Safdar Jang at Delhi). |
| Râjâh Rám Nárâyân Diwán. alias Partâp Nárâyân (mostly employed in the Subâhs). |

| Mâhârájâh Lachmî Nárâyân (Wâkil at Delhi). |

Shú Jagat Nárâyân. Nárâyân. (Wâkil at Delhi).
service, who at the head of nine hundred or a thousand men had arrived as far as Kannauj on their way to join their master, retreated by way of Lakhnau to Jhúsi. Then 'Ali Kuli Khán Karkhi, the deputy in the Allahábád Subah, came out to meet them.* There they heard that Shádí Khán was marching down country at the head of twenty thousand men. 'Ali Kuli Khán with his own troops and part of those of Ráe Partáp Náráyan advanced to oppose Shádí Khán. The two armies met each other at Kořá-Jahá-nábád† where a battle ensued, and Shádí Khán having been defeated began to retreat.

When this news was brought to Nawáb Ahmad Khán, he proposed to send large reinforcements, but his chief counsellors overruled him, and advised his proceeding in person, hoping that the fort of Allahábád would be evacuated at his approach. Nawáb Baḵá-ullah Khán and 'Ali Kuli Khán, hearing of Ahmad Khán’s advance, beat a rapid retreat, and took refuge in the fort of Allahábád. Ahmad Khán when he had reached Kořá halted several days, and intended to return home himself, leaving the fighting to Mansúr 'Ali Khán,‡ Rustam Khán Bangash, and Sa’dat Khán Afrídí, brother of Mahmúd Khán, Bakhshi to Nawáb Kháím Khán, these three leaders having a large force in their pay. But he was persuaded to go on by the arrival of wakís from the eastern Rájáhs, Pirthipat, son of Chattarhlári, son of Jí Sukh, Sombansí, ruler of Partábgárh,§ and Rájáh Balvant Singh of Banárás. The agents were introduced through Mustájáb Khán Warákzai and Háji Safaráz Khán, who were then in attendance. The letters were to the effect that if the Nawáb would continue his advance to Allahábád, they undertook to obtain the fort for him in a very short time, after that the whole of the eastern country would fall into his power. After receiving these letters the Nawáb went on towards Allahábád, and

* The Khízána Amíra, p. 83, distinguishes this 'Ali Kuli Khán from 'Ali Kuli Khán Dághístání, poetically Wálı́h, but the local historians, Wálı́-ullah and the "Laúh" make them one and the same. Mir Ghulám 'Ali is the most likely to be right, as he was acquainted personally with the poet Wálı́h, Hisám-ud-dín calls this man simply the "Allahábád," and the "Siar-ul-Mutákhárán," p. 879, says he had been in the service of Sayyad Muhammad Khán, náib of the Allahábád Súbah on the part of 'Umdat-ul-Mulk Amír Khán. Káli Ráe in the Fatehgarh-náma (p. 54,) refers to the author of a book called the Haft Aklám, who states that he was present in this retreat from Lakhnau. The reference is, I now find, to the Hadíkat-ul-Aklám.

† On the Grand Trunk Road, some thirty-four miles north-west of the town of Fathpur.

‡ Thirteenth son of N. Muhammad Khán.

§ Or as Hisám-ud-dín says, Azímgãr. Partábgárh lies thirty-two miles north of Allahábád. There is a capital account of the family in the Hadíkat-ul-Aklám under the head, Partábgárh in the Second Clime.
Rájáh Pirthipat, marching from Partábgår, brought his army to the edge of the Ganges, where he encamped. On the Nawáb’s arrival he crossed the river and paid him a visit, when he was presented with a khila’t and at his own request he was posted to the vanguard.

Reaching Allahábád the Nawáb appears to have crossed over to Jhúsi on the other or left bank of the Ganges, where he planted his guns on the high ground known as the fort of Rájáh Harbong.* The whole of Allahábad from Khuldábad up to the fort was burnt down and plundered, and four thousand women and children were made prisoners. Nothing was spared but the abode of Shekh Muhammad Afzal Allahábádí and the quarter of Daryábad which was entirely occupied by Paţháns.†

The defence of the fort on the part of the Wazír was conducted by Baḵá-ullah Khán and ‘Ali Kháli Khán, Zárjí. By chance one Indargir Sunyási‡ had come there on a pilgrimage with five thousand naked fighting fulkire, who lay between the old city and the fort. These took the side of the Wazír’s people. Baḵá-ullah Khán, who was an able man and experienced in war, threw a bridge over the river between the Bení (properly Tribeni) gate of the fort and the town of Aráil, which is on the right bank of the Ganges just below its junction with the Jumna. He left his camp standing in that town, while morning and evening he marshed his troops to and from the fort. All day an artillery fire was kept up from the walls upon the troops of Nawáb Ahmad Khán. On his side the leaders, Rájáh Pirthipat and others, made every effort to carry the fort but without success.

At this time Rájáh Bálwant Singh, who had been directed to appear in person, arrived at Jhúsi.§ He was introduced through the Nawáb’s son

* Elliot’s Supplemental Glossary, p. 466, “Harbong ká rág.”
† Khízámá ‘Amíra, p. 83.
‡ Rájáh Indár Gir was a Sunyási from Jhánsi in Bundelkhand. He had seized parganah Moth (in the Jhansi district) in 1745, and building a fort there soon acquired possession of 114 villages. About 1749-50 he was ejected from Moth by a force under Narú Shankar, the Mahratta Subah, and he then found his way to Allahábád. (Jenkinson’s Jhansi Report, pp. 172 and 173). After the raising of this siege, he was introduced to the Wazír by Baḵá-ullah Khán, and accepted service on two conditions (1) that he might beat his kettle-drums when in the Wazír’s retinue, (2) that in audience he should not be obliged to put his hand to his head. He took part in the Rohilkhand campaign and was killed in Rajab 1165 H. (4th May 1752—2nd June 1752), in the fighting between Safídar Jang and ‘Amád-ul-Mulk. The “Life of Háiż Rahmat Khán,” p. 49, says Najíb Khán killed him with his own hand. In the year 1762 we shall come across his chelas and successors, Anúp Gir Himmat Bahádur and his brother Umráo Gir.
§ At Jhúsi is the tomb of Sháh Muhammad Taḵí, a descendant of Hazrat Ghaus-ul-islám, Miráh Hamíd-ud-din, Muhammad Ghaus, Gwáliyári.
Mahmúd Khán, who not long before had arrived from Lakhnau. The Rájáh made a present of one lakh of rupees and received a khila’ít with a confirmation of half his territory, the other half being put under Sáhib Zamán Khán, Dilázák of Jaunpur, cousin to one of the Nawáb’s wives.* Nawáb Ahmad Khán told the Rájáh to cross over to Aráil with Mahmúd Khán, and encamp there after driving away Baká-ullah Khán’s men, in order to put an end to the passage to and fro of troops to the fort, and to interrupt the arrival of supplies. The Rájáh agreed to the proposal and returning to his camp at Jhúsi he sent in all directions for boats.

When their spies reported this to Baká-ullah Khán and the other leaders of the enemy, they began to consult how they could prevent the danger of an attack from two sides. They decided that the next day they would fight the army in front of them. Accordingly Baká-ullah Khán came across the bridge with a large force and the troops coming out of the fort joined him. Indargir Sunyási also receiving orders to join, advanced beyond the shelter of the fort and drew up in battle array from the Ganges bank to a point between the old city and the fort.

As soon as he heard this, Nawáb Ahmad Khán mounted and advanced to the edge of his camp. Thence he deputed Nawáb Mansúr Ali Khán† and Nawab Shádi Khán‡ to take the command, and they at once commenced an advance. Besides their own men they had with them 10,000 men commanded by Rustam Khán Bangash, 4000 under Sa’dat Khán Afrídí, 2000 under Mangal Khán, 3000 Yakka (men riding their own horses) under Muhammad ’Ali Khán Afrídí and 2000 under ’Abd-ur-rasúl Khán, chela. There were besides other leaders such as Námdár Khán, the brother of Nawáb Ghairat Khán, Núr Khán, son of Khalíl Khán Mataniya, Námdár Khán, brother of Himmat Khán Mataniya, and ’Abdullah Khán Warakzai. The Nawáb ordered all these leaders to advance with their men and drive back the enemy. To Rájáh Pirthipat he said—“The van is yours, repair to your post.”

The Rájáh then headed the attack and the battle began. For three hours cannon, rockets and muskets never ceased their uproar. At length Rájáh Pirthipat, who was in front, got the advantage and made his way up to the enemy’s ranks. Seeing this, Mansúr ’Ali Khán and the other leaders advanced rapidly to his support. The Rájáh dismounted from his elephant and got upon his horse. His companions then left their horses and drawing their swords rushed at the enemy. On reaching the spot, † Thirteenth son of N. Muhammad Khán.

‡ Sixteenth son of N. Muhammad Khán.
Mansūr 'Ali Khán got down from his elephant, and went forward in front of the Rájáh. The best of Baká-ullah Khán's men were slain or wounded; and Nawáb Baká-ullah Khán, seeing that the day was lost, withdrew his men across the bridge. The artillery-men left their guns, came out of the fort, and retreated across the bridge. The bridge was then broken up at the other end by the retreating enemy. Nawáb Ahmad Khán's army thus gained the victory and occupied the field of battle.

From the spot where they had halted, the bridge was in full view. At the time the fight began, Sa'dat Khán Afrúdí had led his men against the enemy in advance of Mansúr 'Ali Khán's position. When Mansúr 'Ali Khán's men saw this, in a spirit of emulation, they also ran forward and took the lead. Among these Hisám-ud-din says he himself was present, being then attached to Mansúr 'Ali Khán's force. After the victory Sa'dat Khán and Hisám-ud-din were standing near the breastwork (ṣafíl) of the fort, where the bridge could be seen in detail. They wished to advance to the head of the bridge. Rájáh Pirthipat was of the same advice. But when Nawáb Ahmad Khán heard of the victory, he at once sent a camel-rider to recall Nawáb Mansúr 'Ali Khán; for to advance further would only be to strike one's head against stone walls. On receiving these orders, Mansúr 'Ali Khán turned to retreat. Pirthipat said to him that apparently the fort had been evacuated; if they marched to the bridge head, any one left in the fort would certainly fire on them; if they were not fired on, they would know that the fort was empty and could then occupy it. Mansúr 'Ali Khán said he could not go forward against orders, and ordering his drums to beat in honour of the victory, he returned to the Nawáb's presence, where with the other leaders he presented his "nazár."

While the siege was going on, Ahmad Khán had appointed Sáhib Zamán Khán, Dilázák of Jaunpur, to be his viceroy in Jaunpur, 'Azimgarh, Mahaul, Akbarpur, and other places.* Balwant Singh refused to give up the territory, and urgent orders were sent to Sáhib Zamán Khán to expel

* The Dilázák Pathans had been settled in Jaunpur from the time of Muhammad Sháh (1719—1749). Their connection with Ahmad Khán is shown thus:—

(Father not named).

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Sher Zamán Khán.</th>
<th></th>
<th>Muhammad Zamán Khán.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Daughter m. to Nawáb Ahmad Khán.</td>
<td></td>
<td>Sáhib Zamán Khán.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
him. Some reinforcements were sent to him and he was joined by Akbar Sháh, Rájáh of ’Azimgárh, and Shamshér Jahán, zamindár of Mahaul, twenty-three miles north-west of ’Azimgárh. The army was assembled at Akbarpur,* and the small fort of Sarhanpúr near the camp was taken after a siege of fifteen days. An advance was then made against Jaunpúr, and after six hours’ fighting the assailants effecting an entrance made themselves masters of the place. Sáhib Zamán Khán still delayed his advance, and turned off towards Nizámábád, thirty-two miles north-east of Jaunpúr. After the compromise with Balwant Singh already related, Sáhib Zamán Khán with Hájí Sarfaráz Khán advanced to take possession of the country north of the Ganges. Not long after this Ahmad Khán, on the approach of Safdar Jang and the Mahrattas, beat a retreat to Farrukhábád. Balwant Singh then marched from Gangápur, some miles west of Banáras, to Mariáhú, twelve miles south of Jaunpúr, and made a demand on Sáhib Zamán Khán for a return of the territory. The contending parties met in battle array, when Balwant Singh’s Afghan leaders refused to fight against their fellow-countryman, Sáhib Zamán Khán, now that his power was gone. Balwant Singh thus found it advisable to negotiate. Sáhib Zamán Khán then pitched his tent at Chandipur, and next day, a riot about arrears of pay having broken out, he started alone for Azimgárh. Balwant Singh then plundered his house.
Not feeling safe in Azimgárh, Sáhib Zamán Khán went on to Bettiah,† where the Rájáh gave him shelter. After some time he returned to Jaunpúr and was reinstated by Balwant Singh. On his death he was succeeded by his sons, but they were not men of any mark.‡

The story goes that, when the approach of the Patháns was heard of in Banáras, the leading money-lenders went out as far as Phúlpur, some eight kos or more from Banáras, and offered a tribute of two krors of rupees on condition that the Patháns did not enter their city. Even in a dream, they said, if they saw a Pathán a long way off, they began to tremble. The two krors were accepted and the Patháns retraced their steps.§

Siege of Fatehgárh and flight of the Nawáb.

The Wazír after his defeat at Rám Chatauni returned to Delhi on the 29th Shawál (20th September, 1750). He found the Emperor had been put strongly against him. He was much cast down and for many days never left his private apartments, passing most of the day reclining with his hand over his face. At length his wife roused him to exertion and

* Perhaps the Akbarpur in the Faizabad district about 48 miles north of Jaunpur.
† Across the Gandak river in the Champárán district.
‡ Curwen’s translation of the Balwantnamah, pp. 25-29.
§ ’Amád-us-Sá’dat, p. 50, from line 1.
promised him all the money she possessed. Thus encouraged he sent for Rájáh Nágar Mall, Lachmi Náráyan, and Isma’il Beg Khán. The latter advised waiting for an army from Afghánístán. Nágar Mall proposed calling in the Rohelas, who, owing to the attack on them by Káim Khán, bore ill-will to the Farrukhábád Pañtháns. The Wazir rejected this advice, saying that though Pañtháns might fight amongst themselves, they would always unite against any third person. He then asked Lachmi Náráyan for his opinion. In reply he called attention to the large force of 70,000 or 80,000 Mahrattas, under Jai A’pá and Mulhár Ráo, then in the neighbourhood of Kotáb,* and reminded the Wazir that the Pañtháns started at the sound of the Mahratta name, and that one thousand Mahrattas could dispose of ten thousand Pañtháns. The Wazir determined to invoke the aid of the Mahrattas.

The next important point was to effect a reconciliation with the Emperor. For this purpose Jugal Kishor was sent to ask help from Nawáb Názir Jáwed Khán, the Emperor’s favourite eunuch. After he had heard the full details of the Wazir’s case, the Nawáb Názir said the matter could only be discussed in a personal interview. On Wednesday he would ride out to pray at the shrine of the saint, Sultán-ul-Musháikh Nizám-ud-dín. On his way back he would come to the Wazir’s house, when he would state the obstacles to a settlement. Jugal Kishor returned and reported these words to his master. On the Wednesday, after paying a visit to the shrine of Nizám-ud-dín, Jáwed Khán came privately to the Wazir’s house. After other conversation, the Názir said to the Wazir that the Emperor’s mind had, in an extreme degree, been turned against him, nor could any remark favourable to him be ventured on in the Emperor’s presence; and Nawáb Firúz Jang was so strenuous in support of Nawáb Ahmad Khán, that no one dare open his mouth to say a word to the contrary. The Wazir said some words easy to understand (karíb-ul-fahm, i.e., offered a bribe, I suppose) to the Názir, asking his intercession with the Emperor and using at the same time powerful arguments. The Nawáb Názir professed himself convinced, and promised that when he saw a chance he would speak in Safdar Jang’s favour and, please God, he would turn the Emperor’s heart towards him. He then rose, mounted, and went home.

Three days afterwards a news-letter came from the writer attached to Ahmad Khán’s camp. He wrote that the eastern zamindars, Rájáh Pirthipat, Rájáh Balwant Singh and others, had brought treasure and had submitted themselves to Nawáb Ahmad Khán; they had joined him in laying siege to Allahábád, which would shortly fall; a large army had collected and was gathering strength every day, a hundred thousand horsemen and number.

* On the Chambal, 195 miles S. W. of Agra, and 260 miles from Delhi.
less footmen had gathered under the Nawáb’s standard; and it remained to be seen what would be disclosed from behind the curtain of the unknown after the fort of Allahábád had fallen. The Nawáb Názir seized the moment and began to repeat, as had been agreed upon, the speeches made to him by the far-sighted Wazír. The Názir described in touching language his great perplexity at the aspect of affairs, which had quite deprived him of sleep. Before Safdar Jang came back to Delhi after his defeat, Fírúz Jang had caused a congratulatory fúrmán to be addressed to Ahmad Kháń confirming to him his ancestral dominions. Not content with this gracious act, he had without orders occupied estates directly under the crown (khálsa), he had sent his son to take the Súbah of Audh, and now himself was besieging Allahábád. The next attempt would be upon Bengal. The letter writers had already informed his Majesty in detail of the immense army which had been collected. Now the learned declare that the Akhán Darweza, written by the spiritual head and high priest of the Afghán race, prescribes that any Afghán at the head of more than twelve thousand men is required and bound to claim complete sovereignty. In that case, Ahmad Kháń, who had one hundred thousand men and a territory equal to nearly four or five Súbahs, could not possibly refrain from proclaiming himself king.

When Názir Jawed Kháń had got this length in his artful representation, his Majesty became perplexed and asked him the best way out of the difficulty. The Názir at once proposed a pardon of Safdar Jang’s misdeeds, the task of reducing Ahmad Kháń to subjection being then committed to him. The Emperor objected that nothing could be hoped from Safdar Jang, for, although he had gone with a large army provided with cannon and rockets, he had been overthrown by Ahmad Kháń with a very small force. Now that Ahmad Kháń’s strength had much increased, how could Safdar Jang with the same dispirited troops attempt to oppose Ahmad Kháń. There is a proverb Zadah rá báyad zad, i. e., Beaten once will be beaten again.* The Emperor continued that to his mind the Názir’s device was the poorest of the poor (khám dar khám), and he declined to accept it, for a good scheme should have no such obvious drawback. In reply to his Majesty, Názir Jáved Kháń said that he had a plan within his plan, for Mulhár Ráo and Apá Sendhia, who were at that time encamped in the Rajpút country, though they were his enemies, would, if sent for, enter his Majesty’s service; and hoping for benefit to themselves, they would be certain to carry out faithfully any orders given them. Suraj Mall Jat’s forces also, though they were present with Safdar Jang, had not been scattered or defeated. There was also Háfiz Rahmat Kháń, head of the Rohelas, who was a great friend of Safdar Jang. At length the Emperor gave way to Jáwed

* Roebuck, 1214.
Khán's persuasions, and ordered him to tell Safdar Jang that his faults were forgiven, and that the next day he should present himself for an audience. Jáwed Khán repaired joyfully to his house, and at night he went to the Wazír. After they had embraced, the whole of the conversation with the Emperor was repeated. Then the Názir taking with him Jugal Kishor returned to his home, where he told Jugal Kishor to inform the Wazír that the next day he must present himself to obtain audience, and a list of the nazarána must be prepared at once, the amount not being less than twenty-five lakhs of rupees. Jugal Kishor returned and reported to the Wazír, who said that this amount of nazarána had been fixed in his interview with Jáwed Khán.

Early the next day the Emperor left his private apartments, and entering the public hall of audience seated himself on his marble throne. The great nobles and high officials, with the Mir Túzak, having presented themselves and made obeisance, took up position according to their rank. Then Názir Jáwed Khán was ordered to go out to meet the Wazír, Safdar Jang, and bring him to his Majesty's presence. When Jáwed Khán reached the Wazír's house, thirty trays of jewels and rich clothes were placed before him. After making the customary protestations of refusal, he accepted them. They then proceeded to the presence, and Safdar Jang touched the Emperor's foot with his forehead. The Emperor lifted his head and clasped it to his breast. The Wazír said, "I have committed great faults, but I hope for forgiveness, as Sa'di says

"Bandah hamán bih kih 'z taḵsír-i-khwesh
'Uzr ba dargáh-i-khudá award;
Warma sazávár-i-khudáwandesh
Kas na tawánad kih bajá award."

The Emperor replied "I have after reflection forgiven you, and accept your excuses." A dress of honour of ten pieces, jewels, a horse out of the Emperor's stable, a sword, and an elephant were granted to the Wazír. Safdar Jang then presented his list of nazarána, amounting to twenty-five lakhs of rupees. He then took his leave and with great joy set out on his way home, distributing fifty thousand rupees in alms as he went.

In accordance with Nazar Jáwed Khán's proposal, an imperial farman was issued to Mulhár Ráo* and Apá Sendhia;† The bearer of it, Rám Náráyan,‡ found the Mahrattas two marches this side of Kotah, which is

* Rose to notice in 1724, died 1767-8. Grant Duff, 212 and 338.
† Succeeded his father Rána ji about 1750, was assassinated in 1759. Grant Duff, 270 and 310.
‡ Hisám-ud-din says Jugal Kishor went. The Siyar-ul-M, p. 88, names Jugal two hundred and sixty miles south of Delhi. At first, Āpā Sendhia demanded two krors of rupees, while Rám Náráyan offered fifty lakhs. At length Mulhár Ráo consented to take one kror and persuaded Āpā Sendhia, who at length agreed; or some say the agreement was for twenty-five thousand rupees a day while the campaign lasted.* At any rate the Mahrattas commenced their march towards Delhi, where they soon arrived. A man of rank was sent out some distance to meet them, and the next day Mulhár Ráo and Āpā Sendhia had an audience of the Emperor, at which they were invested with khila’ts. The Wazír had sent for Suraj Mall Jáṭ, who also received a robe of honour. The Wazír then requested orders to march, and the Emperor bestowing a Fath-peek (a kind of turban?) on Safdar Jang, directed him to march with his army against Ahmad Kháň. Safdar Jang crossed the Jamna with his own troops, and those attached to him, that is, the royal army (Báṣīl), the Mahrattas, and the Jáṭs.

Safdar Jang’s first order to the Mahrattas was to expel Shádil Kháň, the Farrukhábád Āmil, from the neighbourhood of Koil, and then to follow up his retreat to Farrukhábád. Mulhár Ráo and Āpá Sendhia sent off Píndára horsemen to spoil and burn throughout Ahmad Kháň’s territory. Hastening off as ordered, they began their usual plundering and surround-ed Shádil Kháň. Soon after this, Mulhár Ráo and Āpá Sendhia arrived in person and began an attack. Although his force was small compared with that of the enemy, Shádil Kháň maintained his position for a time and did all that was in his power. After holding his own for one day and killing a good many of the enemy, he withdrew across the Ganges to Kádir Chauk, in parganah Aujháni of the Budaon district, whence after writing an account of affairs to Ahmad Kháň at Allahábád, he marched eastwards along the left bank of the Ganges towards Farrukhábád. Shádil Kháň’s retreat took place in the early part of Jumádi I. 1164 H. (17th March, 15th April, 1751).

About six months had elapsed from the defeat of the Wazír in September 1750, when Nawáb Ahmad Kháň heard at Allahábád of the retreat of Shádil Kháň before the Mahrattas. He sent for Rájáh Pírthipat and told him that, in order to repel the Wazír, he must return home at once; and by God’s favour, having again defeated his enemy, he would rejoin the Rájáh and occupy the eastern districts. The Rájáh said he had one piece of advice to give, which was that he thought it inexpedient to return to Farrukhábád Kishor and Lachmi Náráyan. The author of the Siyar-ul-M. says, it was his uncle Sayyad 'Abd-ul-Ali Kháň who first suggested calling in the Mahrattas.

* The Siyar-ul-M. adds that the Jats were to get 15,000 Rs. and the Mahrattas Rs. 25,000 a day. when the Wazir was already so near, for, however fast the Nawáb might march, it would be nearly impossible to arrive in time; and supposing that Farrukhábád were reached in time, the troops being scattered would still have to be collected; it would therefore be better to cross the Ganges into the Súbah of Oudh and then proceed westwards, by which several advantgages would be gained. A hurried march need not be made, the army would not be scattered, the zamindars of Súbah Audh, who had been turned out of their homes in the time of Naval “bad-ami,” would unsought bring aid, in money and in men. Another reason was that the immense number of mercenaries, who had collected under the Nawáb’s standard, would disperse in the course of a rapid retreat on Farrukhábád. The Nawáb determined to consult his chief men, and the Rájáh took his leave. Then Nawáb Ahmad Khán sent for Rustam Khán Bangash, Mangal Khán Ghilzai, Muhammad Khán Afrídí, Sa’dat Khán Afrídí, Mustajáb Khán Warakzai, Hájí Sarfaráz Khán and others. When they had been informed of the Rájáh’s proposals, they asked for time to consult with each other. They then went apart and discussed the question. The majority of votes was against crossing the Ganges, Hájí Sarfaráz Khán alone dissented. They returned to the Nawáb’s presence, and stated that, in their opinion, by crossing the Ganges, the enemy would be deceived into believing that they had crossed from fear. “Let us fear nothing,” they added, “this is the same Wazir whom we have already defeated, and, by God’s help, we will so wield our good swords, that our enemy shall not escape alive again; the enemy and his army are to us like the well-known proverb ‘You may beat the beaten.’” The Nawáb turning to Hájí Sarfaráz Khán said, “You say nothing.” The Hájí replied, that his opinion would not please any of the others, but he thought that Rájáh Pirthipat’s advice was the best.

According to the decision of the commanders, a march direct for Farrukhábád was ordered. The Rájáh being sent for and informed of the decision, he asked what orders there were for him. The Nawáb said, he left the Rájáh in that country for the present as his representative; he should, therefore, return to his own zamindári and recall the Audh zamindárs to their homes. The Rájáh then received a khila’t and, having been dismissed, he crossed the Ganges and hastened to his own country.*

* Under the year 1165 H. the Baicvent-náma relates how the Nawáb Wazír started for Banáras intending to take his revenge on Rájáh Pirthipat. At Sultánpur, about 36 miles S. of Faizábád and 85 miles N. of Allahábád, Rájáh Pirthipat presented himself. When thrown off his guard by friendly words, he was stabbed by ‘Ali Beg Khán, on a sign from the Wazír. Pirthipat, who was unarmed, sprang upon his murderer, and biting a piece out of his cheek fell dead with it in his mouth. The date of 1163 H. given in the Misfáh, p. 498, must be wrong, and the
By order of the Nawáb, his son, Mahmúd Khán, then about fifteen years of age, moved from Jhúsi westwards through Audh. On the road the zamindars of Đundýákheů, fifty miles south of Lakhnau, plundered the carts carrying the Naváb’s personal effects (tosha-khánã). When it was reported to Mahmúd Khán that the baggage had been plundered and several soldiers killed, he halted, and in six hours sacked the village and massacred the inhabitants. After the fight some thousands of boxes were recovered in the village. As he advanced further west, he learnt that the Sheikhs of Lakhnau and Kákauri* had risen and ejected the Patháns from those two places. At that time no reprisals were possible, and the young Nawáb marched on, near Bilgrám† where he met with some resistance, past Sándí and Páli,‡ to the bank of the Ganges opposite his father’s entrenchment at Fatehgárh.

Commencing his march westwards from Allahábád, Nawáb Ahmad Khán in six days reached his own capital. But the adventurers, who had before joined him from all sides, being pure mercenaries, melted away on the road and retired to places of safety. Only those of good name and position remained true to his standard. His first care was to send off the Bibi Sáhiba and his female relations, who with considerable reluctance crossed the Ganges and set out for Sháhjáhánpúr or Anwalah. Many of the inhabitants of the city, seeing her departure, began to desert their homes. The Nawáb now summoned all the commanders and leaders, name by name, to devise means of opposing the enemy. All the commanders and leaders, the bankers and chief traders of the bazar, all who were noted for their intelligence and ability, appeared before the Nawáb. They represented to him that the enemy was very numerous, while the Nawáb’s force in comparison was like salt in flour. Admitting that though few they were brave, yet the wise men of old had said “one fights with one, not one with a thousand.” It was true the Nawáb was capable of meeting the kings of Europe in battle array, yet on this occasion the Wazíf, to remove the stain to his name caused by his previous disgrace, had brought all the fighting men of Hindústán, the Játs and the Mahrattas, like a tribe of ants or a flight of locusts. They therefore thought it advisable to move to the Ganges bank, near the ferry of Hussainpur, three miles east of the city.

Siyar-ul-M., p. 383, indirectly confirms the date of 1165 H. The Oudh Gazetteer (II. 477 and III. 147) states the scene of the assassination to have been Gutní, on the Ganges, five miles south of Mánikpur.

* About 12 miles W. of Lakhnau.
† In the Hardoi district, about 34 miles from Farrukhábád.
‡ Both in the Hardoi district.
where there was a position favourable for defence with a small fort.* Around it was then a wide, open, plain about a square mile in extent. At the edges of the plain were deep ravines. They thought it best for the army to encamp in that spot. It is nowhere stated why the fort in the city was considered untenable; perhaps because it could be cut off on the outer side from the surrounding country and its supplies; while at Fatehgarh the army had the river flowing under its camp, by which boats could have easy access to it, and this danger was averted, so long as the enemy failed to cross the river and occupy the other bank.

At once, on hearing the suggestions of his chief men, relations and advisors, the Nawâb heartily agreed, and mounting his horse proceeded in state, with all his forces, to the place appointed on the bank of the Ganges, and there formed his camp. Next day the division of the army attached to the artillery arrived and brought the guns into camp. Then the Nawâb in person went out and taking up his position at the head of the ravines already referred to, directed the posting of the guns, large and small, and caused them to be connected by chains. Making over charge of the guns to his brothers and the Risâldars, he returned to his head quarters on the Ganges bank, and ordered a bridge of boats to be got ready. The day the bridge was finished, the Nawâb's son, Mâhmûd Khân, reached the river on the opposite or left bank, and Shâdil Khân Ghilzai also came up from Kâdir Chauk in the opposite direction. The day after their arrival, both of them were honoured with interviews.

We now return to what had happened meanwhile to the Wâzîr. When his spies brought him word that Nawâb Ahmad Khân had returned from Allahábâd, and was preparing for defence, he sent for Mulhâr Râo and A'pâ, and asked them what was their plan of operations. They replied that they were at his orders. The Wâzîr told them to despatch one of their principal men with a strong force to surround Ahmad Khân, and cut off his supplies of food, water, and forage. Accordingly they detached Tântiâ with ten thousand active horsemen towards Farrukhâbâd.

On reaching the environs of that city forsaken by its ruler, they set many villages and towns in flames. When the Mahratta horse entered the city, and found within it nothing but perplexity, poverty, hunger and thirst, giving up all hope of plunder, they marched on to the place where the Nawâb stood prepared for resistance. As their eyes fell on his army they said to one another, "O friends! Mulhâr Râo and A'pâ Sendhia sent us to engage and surround this force; but this Nawâb is so brave and "of such peerless race, that with only a few men he overthrew the Wâzîr "and his countless host." With such men they considered it was necessary to act with circumspection. Hearing that some guns had been left at Yākutganj, about five miles south of the city and four miles from Fatehgarh, Tántiá sent off some of his horse in that direction. They collected a number of villagers and began to drag the guns towards their own camp. As they approached Kásim Bágh*, about half a mile south-west of Fatehgarh fort and Hussainpur, the Patháns, who had concealed themselves in the ravines, made a sudden rush and fell upon the guns, turned them on the Mahrattas, and fired shot and rockets, so as to kill many and put the rest to flight. When Tántiá saw this disaster, he mounted and ordered out his troops. The whole of his force advanced against the Patháns and commenced a musketry fire, accompanying it with the discharge of rockets. On hearing this firing, Nawáb Khán mounted and coming to the batteries stood there. He ordered his risálahdárs to advance to support the Patháns already under fire. Shádil Khán Ghilzai, Sa’dat Khán Afrídí, Muhammed Ali Khán Afrídí, Muhammed Khán Afrídí, Khán Miyan Khán Khatak, ‘Umár Khán Gwáliyári, Námáír Khán, brother of Nawáb Gháirat Khán, Núr Khán, son of Khalíf Khán Mataniya, Mangal Khán of Tilhar and others, left their batteries and advanced to support the Patháns. Tántiá on his side came on to meet and repel them. When the two forces came closer, the musketry fire ceased and swords were drawn. The Afghan attack was so fierce that they even began to wrestle with their enemies, and to lay hold of them by the neck. Unable to bear up against the assault, the Mahrattas took to flight. When this success was reported to him, Nawáb Ahmad Khán sent a camel-rider with orders forbidding a further advance, and recalled the troops. The commanders on receiving this order, sent on the recovered guns in front, and followed them into camp with drums beating a triumphal march. The Nawáb gave praise to each private soldier and dresses of honour to the leaders. He then went back to his tents.

* Now known as Fatehgarh fort.

On hearing of Tántiá’s defeat, the Wázir with the Játs, Mahrattas, and the remainder of his army continued his march till he arrived near the Nawáb’s entrenchment. He left Mulhár Ráo, Apá Sendhia and Tántiá at the Kásim Bágh. He proceeded on himself till he arrived at Singhirámípur, a ferry on the right bank of the Ganges in Parganah Bhojpur, some eleven or twelve miles further down the river than Fatehgarh, and there he fixed his own encampment. Then he issued orders to Núr-ul Hasan Khán Biligrámí to throw a bridge of boats across the river.

When Nawáb Ahmad Khán heard of the Wázir’s intentions, he gave orders to his son, Mâhmúd Khán, who was posted upon the farther or left bank of the river, to detach two or three thousand men to prevent the bridge being thrown across by the Wazir. The young Nawáb deputed Lála Sýám Singh, brother of the deceased Shamšher Jang, chela. This chief at the head of his own regiment repaired to the threatened point, and on reaching it found the bridge half made. He began such a heavy musketry and rocket fire, that the enemy left their bridge and ran away. The attempt to cross was thus defeated, to be renewed afterwards with more success.

* The native infantry hospital is now in the Bágh, where is the tomb of Kásim Khán.

On the receipt of the first news of the Wazir's return with the Mah-rattas, Nawáb Ahmad Khán had written in all directions for aid. Amongst others, he wrote to Nawáb Sa'dullah Khán and Háfiz Rahmat Khán, the heads of the Rohela confederacy, saying that though they had differences, they could settle those among themselves, but need not allow injury to come from the hand of strangers. He hoped they would send troops to help him, so that they might jointly attack their common foe. Háfiz Rahmat Khán first excused himself on the ground of the blood-feud between them, caused by the death of Káim Khán; till the blood of Káim Khán was forgiven, he would be afraid to trust his men in Ahmad Khán's power. The Nawáb replied, that he made them a gift of Káim Khán's blood-feud, and thenceforth till the day of judgment he would take no revenge on them.

On the receipt of this letter, Sa'dullah Khán, son of Ali Muhammad Khán, sent for Háfiz Rahmat Khán, Donde Khán, Mullá Sardár Khán, Fath Khán, and Bahádur Khán, chela, informed them of its contents, and asked their advice. Háfiz Rahmat Khán, by reason of his affection for the Wazir, sat silent, and owing to his silence the other leaders would say nothing. Sa'dullah Khán asked Háfiz Rahmat Khán, why he said nothing? Rahmat Khán asked the Nawáb, what his own intentions were? The Nawáb replied, that his intentions depended upon those of others. Háfiz Rahmat Khán's answer was, that in that case the Nawáb would have to give up taking any part in the war. Bahádur Khán, who owing to his bravery took the lead among all the Rohela commanders, exclaimed, "Have our leaders "exchanged their turbans for women's veils, for such coward words should "be unknown to any Pathán lip." Then turning to the Nawáb, he said, that if orders for the march were not given, he should the next day start himself without orders, taking his regiment with him, and any Afghán, who cherished his name and reputation, might follow. Then rising he took his leave, and began his preparations. Nawáb Sa'dullah Khán repaired to the female apartments, where he repeated to his mother word for word the altercation which had occurred between Háfiz Rahmat Khán and Bahádur Khán. He then asked her what he ought to do, to follow Háfiz Rahmat Khán or Bahádur Khán. His mother said "Light of my eyes! to ask “Advice in such matters from our sex is not seemly, do as your heart dictates, but to me it appears that Háfiz refrains from action out of partiality for the Wazír, while Bahádur Khán’s readiness to join the war, shows his respect for his own good name and reputation.” On hearing these words from his mother’s mouth, Nawáb Sa’du’llah Khán came out of the private apartments, and sent again for all the principal men. He declared that it would be dishonourable in him to refuse Nawáb Ahmad Khán’s request for aid, and accepting all the consequences, he meant to march the next day, those might follow who liked, and the rest might please themselves. Then sending for Bahádur Khán, he said to him, “Inform my regimental commanders that if they hold themselves my servants they will attend me, otherwise, I dismiss them.” Bahádur Khán carried out these orders, and except the contingents of Háfiz Rahmat Khán, Donde Khán, and Mullá Sardár Khán, all the others presented themselves, accompanied by Fath Khán Khánsámán. Next day the march began.

Let us now return to the events which occurred meanwhile between the two contending armies at Fategharh. Every day, on the side of Mulhár Ráo and Ápá Sendhiá, from daybreak up to an hour and a half before sunset, an artillery fire was kept up, directed against the camp of Nawáb Ahmad Khán. At nightfall the Patháns would come out of their shelter in the ravines, go at the batteries and capture perhaps two or three small guns, which, after driving off those in charge, they would bring into their own camp. A little before sunset the rest of those concealed in the ravines came out of hiding, and began to cook or otherwise employ themselves. The leaders went to pay their respects to the Nawáb. One day they were all seated close to the Nawáb’s private tent, when the enemy, noticing them collected in one spot, fired one of their heavy guns in that direction. By chance the ball struck the side of Kázip ‘Ali Khán, son of Shamshér Khán the martyr, then engaged in the evening prayer. It next cut off the arm of Nawáb Shádí Khán, sixteenth son of Muhammad Khán, and hit two or three others. All were killed. On this sudden misfortune being reported to him, Nawáb Ahmad Khán got into his palki and came to the place where the two bodies lay, and standing there he gave orders for their burial, saying that the next day he hoped by God’s grace to put several to the sword in exchange for those lost. After burying the bodies, the Patháns made a sortie and fell upon the camp of the Mahrattas. They fought most bravely and boldly all night, so that the Mahrattas were forced to give way. When the sun rose, the Patháns, with drums beating and swords drawn, returned to their camp with a number of severed Mahratta heads held aloft upon spears.
Upon the Wazír's receiving a detailed report of these nocturnal contests, he sent for the leaders of the Mughals and Kızılbaş, and told them how, although invested, Ahmad Khán's troops each night left their ravines to attack the Mahrattas, and every morning carried back heads upon spears.
He wanted to know what they were about not to prevent this, and he told them that he spat upon their beards. That very day they must proceed to the threatened position, and so fight that they should either defeat the enemy and bring their heads to lay at his, the Wazír's feet, or else give up their own lives to the enemy. Those tiger-cubs (sher-bacha) joined the Mahráṭta army, and after a short rest hastened on to Kásim Bág, opposite to which was the battery commanded by Mansúr 'Ali Khán, the thirteenth son of Nawáb Muhammád Khán. Between the bág and the battery there was no cover, but the ground was uneven and rugged. The sher-bacha advanced out of the bág, and taking shelter in a hollow, began a fire from large muskets. Again advancing in the same manner, they at length came quite close to the battery. When the Kızılbaş horsemen saw that the sher-bacha were close to the battery, they dismounted and advanced as a reinforcement. They all then attacked together. The Patháns, who were ready waiting for the enemy, gave them one round from their cannon and let off a number of rockets, then drawing their swords rushed upon them.
When they had put many of their assailants to death, the rest giving way took refuge again in the Kásim Bág. The Patháns followed them up and, forcing them to continue the retreat, themselves occupied the bág.
To the right of it, on the east side, there is an open space at a much lower level. Here there stood drawn up in ambush a very large force of Mahráttas. Seeing that the Wazír's soldiers were retreating, unable to withstand the Afghán attack, and that the Afgháns quitting their batteries had come as far as Kásim Bág, a number of these horsemen dashed into the space between the battery and the bág. The regiment was under the command of Tántiá. When the valiant Afgháns perceived that the Mahrattas had barred their retreat, they said to each other, "O friends, fire your arrows and aim your swords first at the horses' legs, so that the rider having fallen,
"you may slay him." All the Afgháns adopted this mode of dealing with the Mahráṭta horse, and they killed many of them. At length the Mah-rattas dismounted and continued the fight. This engagement was watched by Mansúr 'Ali Khán Sáhihzádah from the battery. Rising and grasping his sword, he went out on foot towards the enemy. His personal followers with bared swords preceded him, among them was Hisám-ud-dín Gwáliyári, from whose book we quote. Counting his followers and others accidentally present, he found there were about one thousand men or thereabouts.
These came up in the midst of the affray between the Mahrattas and the first party of Pathans. They made an onset in the other direction, and at this point the men from the next battery on the left or east came up to reinforce them. Abdullah Khán Warakzai, Zábíta Khán Kháțak, Anwar Khán Kochar, and others used their swords with such effect that the Mahrattas gave way. When Tántiá saw that his men were on the point of taking to flight, and being angry at the disgrace of his former defeat, he dismounted and exclaimed that he would give up his life sooner than retreat. But his attendants forced him to remount and led him off to his camp. As the defeated Mahrattas began to flee, Nawáb Mansúr 'Ali Khán Sáhibzádah and the other leaders sent for their batteries, and mounting hastened after them as far as the eastern corner of the bágh, whence they saw that the Mahrattas in great confusion had reached their own camp. Mansúr 'Alí Khán and the others, leaving the bágh on their right hand, came round to the west of it and halted. Nawáb Ahmad Khán now rode up to the batteries, and directed the commanders not to leave their batteries nor to draw up their troops beyond the ravines, for the Mahrattas would give no further trouble. Mansúr 'Alí Khán then returned to his old position, and Nawáb Ahmad Khán accorded him great praise. All the commanders were ordered to remain in their batteries on the alert. After this Nawáb Ahmad Khán returned to his own quarters.

After the investment of Fatehgarh had lasted a month and some days, there came the report of the near approach of Nawáb Sa’dullah Khán. This news caused great anxiety to the Wazír, Mulhár Ráo, and Apá Sendhiá. Háiz Rahmat Khán had written to the Wazír, that although he had done his best to dissuade Sa’dullah Khán, his advice had been rejected and the Nawáb had marched to the aid of Ahmad Khán. He therefore advised the Wazír to make a peace with Ahmad Khán, in the best way he could, before Sa’dullah Khán arrived, for, according to the tradition, “Peace is preferable to enmity.”

Next day the Wazír went to Mulhár Ráo and Apá Sendhiá’s quarters, and informing them of Sa’dullah Khán’s march, he asked what they thought. Mulhár Ráo and Apá Sendhiá sending for their principal men reported the matter to them and asked their opinion. All the leaders, except Apá Sendhiá, who was privately favourable to Ahmad Khán, said they were entirely at the disposal of the Wazír, their opinion need not be asked, they would carry out whatever orders they received. The Wazír turning to Apá Sendhiá asked the reason of his silence. He replied that there could be no dispute about the self-evident, what all men could see could not be doubted. They had in no way been slack in carrying on the war, Ráo Tántiá had kept up constant hostilities, yet they had not succeeded. As for the Wazír’s army, which was made up of picked troops, its state the Wazír himself had seen. Ahmad Khán had got the better of both their army and of the Wazír’s, and when Sa’dullah Khán joined him it would be quite impossible for any one to beat the united force. The Wazír then admitted to the Mahratta leaders that Háífz Bahádur Khán, in stating that Sa’dullah Khán had been led astray by Bahádur Khán, added that it would be best for the Wazír to make a peace before Sa’dullah Khán arrived. The Wazír requested their opinion. They answered that there could be nothing better than to do as suggested, for then further losses on both sides would be prevented. The Wazír asked the best way to open negotiations; for if on their side the first advances were made, it would lower their dignity. Apá Sendhiá said, that in his opinion, the objection could be obviated by calling in Nawáb Ghairat Khán and Himmat Khán, who were themselves Paṭháns.

Mulhár Ráo and Apá got up, followed by their chief men, and assembled in another place. They sent for Nawáb Ghairat Khán and Himmat Khán. The Mahrattas told them that they did not wish that Nawáb Ahmad Khán should be reduced to extremities, that he should be expelled from his territories or lose his life in battle. As they wished for peace between Ahmad Khán and the Wazír, they asked them to negotiate. The two Paṭháns recounted all the wrongs received by Ahmad Khán’s family at the hand of the Wazír, and upbraided the Mahrattas for forgetting the former friendship between them and the house of Ghazanfar Jang. The Mahrattas admitted the former friendship, but pleaded the farmán of the Emperor of all Hindustan, which had directed them to serve under the Wazír. Still they had not exerted themselves much, in fact had acted purposely with carelessness and negligence. Ghairat Khán and Himmat Khán then commented unfavourably on the Emperor’s treatment of the Bangash family, and made other objections. At length they were talked over and withdrawing their objections, they asked what the proposals were. Mulhár Ráo asked them to go home, and he would assemble the leaders; when a decision had been arrived at, they should be informed.

The two Paṭháns left and went to their tents, while the Mahrattas remained to discuss the matter among themselves. At last it was decided that ten lakhs of rupees should be given by the Wazír as the price of blood for the sons of Ghazanfar Jang, and that, besides the ancient territory, the Wazír should make over two of his own Maháls, Pálí and Saṇḍí,* which adjoined the other lands of Ahmad Khán. When they went to the Wazír and informed him, he accepted their decision. The leaders then proceeded to the quarters of Nawáb Ghairat Khán and Himmat Khán, where they made them acquainted with the proposed terms, which they considered very favourable to Nawáb Ahmad Khán. They requested that a trusty messenger might be sent to the Nawáb to lay the matter before him on their part. Nawáb Ghairat Khán selected his brother Alaf Khán. Alaf Khán went and represented to Nawáb Ahmad Khán, that ten lakhs would be paid, and that Páli and Sándj would be added to his former territory. As soon as he heard the words, Ahmad Khán said that, if the Wazír paid ten krores of rupees as the price of his brother’s blood, never would he accept it, nor if twenty sons of the Wazír were slain, would he be satisfied. He declined to treat, and left it to the decision of the sword—

* Both now in the Hardoi district of Audh.

“Har kih shamsheer zanad sikka ba-nám-ash khwánd.”

Nor let them think that he was invested in that fort, for he was ready at any moment to meet them in the open field. His defeat of the Wazír had passed into a proverb; as for Suraj Mall Ját, he was the same who had been unable to stand up against him before, and in company with the Wazír had taken to flight. By God’s favour, after victory they would see him act as an honorable and brave man should act. Till their fate had been tried in battle, what peace could there be. If he gained the day, he would attain his desires, if the fates were against him, he bowed to the will of the Most High; but the blood of Ghazanfar Jang’s sons should never be sold for gold. He then gave Alaf Khán his dismissal, and presented him with a dress of honour, a horse, and a sword.

Soon after Alaf Khán had departed, messengers brought word that next day Nawáb Sa’dullah Khán would march up and encamp on the bank of the Ganges. Orders were accordingly given to Nawáb Mahmúd Khán and Manavár Khán Sáhibzádáh to go out to welcome him. At one watch before sunrise those two chiefs started, as directed, to meet and escort Nawáb Sa’dullah Khán.

Next day the army of Sa’dullah Khán, with swords drawn and drums beating, came into sight. It is said they were twelve thousand in number.* All the Patháns and Rohelas, and the soldiers in all directions, out of joy and delight at sight of this reinforcement, began firing off their guns. They were so puffed up with pride and became so haughty that they remembered not God. Sayyad Asad ‘Ali Sháh with several men, among others Hisám-ud-dín Gwáliyári, was seated on the river’s bank watching the arrival of the army of Nawáb Sa’dullah Khán. As the holy man’s glance fell upon the troops on the further side of the river, he became suddenly agitated, and falling into a deep reverie, he exclaimed, “Slain and defeated.” When he returned to his ordinary state, he said that the joy and rejoicing of these men had not found acceptance, they would see what the morrow should bring forth.

Sa’dullah Khán pitched his tents on the opposite or left bank of the river, and Nawáb Ahmad Khán sent off for his use food of every description by the hand of Mustajáb Khán Warakzai. Nawáb Ahmad Khán also sent a request that next day Sa’dullah Khán would cross the Ganges, for it was highly important to combine their forces into one. This message was delivered, but Sa’dullah Khán said that, after consulting with his chief men, he would send word of his intentions. Then he sent for Bahádur Khán and Fath Khán, and told them of Nawáb Ahmad Khán’s request. Bahádur Khán, who was very reckless, replied that it was not meet to present themselves before the head of the Afghán clan without an offering (nazarána), and word should be sent to Ahmad Khán, that if God willed, they, his well-wishers, would the next morning lay before him as an offering the heads of the Wazir, of the Mahratta chiefs, and of the Ját leader. Sa’dullah Khán, being youthful and inexperienced, sent off a message to that effect. Ahmad Khán replied that whatever he thought best he should do, but to one thing he should pay the strictest attention, namely, not on any account to quit his hold of the river bank. When the fighting began, if the Mahrattas turned, he should not let his men pursue, because it was the Mahratta practice to pretend they had been put to flight, and lead their enemy away from his supports. Next day Sa’dullah Khán and Mahmúd Khán and Manavar Khán Sáhibzádah prepared for battle and, ranging their troops in order, led them against the enemy.

On the other hand, the Wazir had been greatly frightened by the arrival of Sa’dullah Khán. He sent for Mulhár Ráo, Apá Sendhiá and Súraj Mall Ját in order to consult. The plan was adopted of sending troops across the river to meet and fight Sa’dullah Khán, before he could unite with Ahmad Khán. The bridge at Singhi-rámpur, which was in bad condition, was put in order. Then Khándé Ráo, son of Mulhár Ráo, and Tántiá Gangádhr with fifty thousand men crossed the bridge. Jowáhir Singh, son of Súraj Mall Ját, and Ráná Bhím Singh, zamindar of Gwáliyár, followed with forty thousand horse and foot. The attack upon the Rohelas then commenced. At first the Rohelas under Bahádur Khán let fly rockets, which fell from the sky like rain; then they discharged their muskets. By degrees they gave over firing and drawing their swords, rushed upon the Hindús, who soon beat a retreat. Bahádur Khán, forgetting Nawáb Ahmad Khán’s counsel, quitted the river bank to pursue the flying enemy. With Bahádur Khán may have been some two or three thousand men. He went in pursuit far ahead of the main body of his troops. The enemy, seeing that there was only a single elephant followed by a few men, without any reserves at hand to reinforce them, turned upon Bahádur Khán and surrounded him. Bahádur Khán got off his elephant, mounted his horse, and followed by his men with their swords.
drawn, tried to repel the enemy. But the Hindus encircled them, as if they were shooting game, and kept up at them a galling discharge of musketry and arrows. They also wounded many and killed many with sword and dhop (a kind of sword) and lance and spear. Bahadur Khan, so long as he was alive, kept hold of his sword, nor did he belie his name of Bahadur (the brave). Not a soul coming up to aid him, at last he fell off his horse, and gave up the ghost. The enemy then cut off his head; and those of his men who remained sought safety in flight. This disastrous defeat, which suddenly changed the whole complexion of the campaign, occurred early in Jamadi II. 1164 H. (16th April—15th May, 1751).

When Sa'dullah Khan heard that Bahadur Khan was killed, he asked Fath Khan Khansamán what should be done. Now, all the other leaders had entertained a deep-felt enmity to Bahadur Khan. At the time of departure from Anwalah, Hafiz Rahmat Khan had said privately to Fath Khan that in battle Bahadur Khan was sure to be the foremost, it would be well to arrange judiciously that no one went to his support, so that he might be overcome and slain, thus getting rid of a great thorn in their side, for it was he who had incited Nawab Sa'dullah Khan into taking the part of Nawab Ahmad Khan. And if Ahmad Khan should overcome the Wazir, he would aim at the throne itself, none being left to contend with him; then, taking satisfaction for the blood of Kaim Khan, he would expel all the Rohelas from their country.

On Sa'dullah Khan's putting the question to him, Fath Khan found his opportunity, and he at once said that the best thing was to turn their faces towards Anwalah. The Nawab replied that honour would not permit him to depart, leaving Ahmad Khan in the mouth of the enemy. Fath Khan answered that Ahmad Khan had now no chance of success, he too would soon follow to Anwalah, where they could consult together on the best course to be pursued. Sa'dullah Khan gave in to these arguments as conclusive and turned his face towards Anwalah.*

Nawab Mahmud Khan and Manavvar Khan, finding that Sa'dullah Khan was moving off towards Anwalah, returned to Nawab Ahmad Khan's head quarters. Rana Bhim Singh and Jowahir Siagh, son of Sauraj Mall Jat, who were in command of the enemy on that side of the river, were now in a position to oppose the return of the two Sahibzadahs. Jowahir Singh wished to cut off their retreat, but the Rana objected. He was a well-wisher to the family of Ghazanfar Jang, Daler Khan, the well known

* The life of Hafiz Rahmat Khan, p. 40, says Sa'dullah Khan reached Anwalah without an attendant on the third day after his departure. On both points this statement must be somewhat exaggerated.
chela of that Nawáb, having been his uncle.* The Ráná's objection prevailed, and an hour or so before sunset, the Sáhibzádahs presented themselves before the Nawáb.

When the report spread that Bahádur Khán had been killed, and that Sa'dullah Khán had retreated to Anwalah, the whole of the men in camp began to tremble like willows. Nawáb Ahmad Khán mounted his elephant, and proceeding to the embrasures of the batteries, told every body that his ability to wage war was not dependent on Sa'dullah Khán, that God willing, he would next day order an advance from the batteries, and going as far as Singhi-rampúr, would give battle to the Wazír. Then privately sending for each leader, he told him to be on the alert, for at three hours before sunrise he would march to make a night-surprise on the enemy. After such-like reassuring speeches he returned to his tent. He gave orders to the men in charge of the bridge to break it up. The investment had now lasted one month and eleven days.

Three hours after night-fall the Mahrattas and Játs set fire to Sa'dullah Khán's tents, and the flames burned so brightly, that it was light as day in Nawáb Ahmad Khán's camp. Those in the army who were frightened, and in all their lives had never seen such a confusion and conflagration, began to make their escape. The leaders and men of reputation alone remained at their posts. These, seeing the state of fright into which their troops had been thrown, went in a body to the Nawáb and represented to him the state of affairs. He asked what they thought. They advised him to cross the Ganges and take safety in flight. At first he refused, but at length becoming convinced that there was no other course open to him, he consented.

Then taking his brothers Murtazza Khán, Khúdábandah Khán, 'Azím Khán, Manavvar Khán, Salábat Khán, Sháistah Khán, and his chief men, such as Rustam Khán Bangash, 'Ináyat 'Ali Khán, Bahyáb Khán, Shádil Khán, Mangal Khán, Sa'dat Khán, Mustajáb Khán, he left the fort while it was still night, and proceeded up stream along the river bank. The Mahrattas came up with the rear guard of the retreating Pátháns near Shikárpur ghat, which is five miles above Fatehgarh. The Nawáb continued his flight to Kamrol ferry, about fifteen or sixteen miles above that place, and there his elephant Kálá-pahár swam across, guided by Ramzání Mahaut, after they had thrown in a bag of gold to propitiate the genius of the stream. Many of his followers lost their lives in attempting to swim their horses across after him. The Nawáb proceeded through Amritpur to Sháhjahanpur, and thence to Anwalah.

* See p. 286, Vol. XLVII, 1878, where I state reasons for doubting the correctness of this relationship.
Meanwhile Nawáb Mansúr 'Ali Khán Sáhibzádah, 'Abdulláh Khán Warakzái and others had received no notification of the Nawáb's departure, their batteries being to the left of the Nawáb's position. When a rumour of the flight of the Nawáb was brought, Mansúr 'Ali Khán got up and mounted his horse, followed by Hisám-ud-dín, Rasúl Khán and others. He sent for his jama'árs and said to them that the Nawáb had sent for him, that he was going to see what orders there were. He then went away. As a long time passed without his returning, Rasúl Khán said to Hisám-ud-dín "I expect the Nawáb has gone," and he sent a man to make enquiries. This messenger did not return. While still waiting for his coming, the night was spent and day began to break. When the rumour of the Nawáb's flight spread, a panic arose, and each man began to look out for his own safety; some hid in the brushwood (jhná) in the river bed; others rode their horses into the stream, thinking to escape by swimming, but they were all drowned. The events of that day, Hisám-ud-dín says, cannot be described, he can only recount what befell himself.

When day arose Hisám-ud-dín, Rasúl Khán, Ghairat Khán and 'Abdulláh Khán resolved to sell their lives dearly, and all by themselves issued from their battery. They saw the Mahrattas stripping of their clothes, one by one, all those fugitives, who had neither got clear off nor had been drowned in the river. A group of these Mahrattas came towards Hisám-ud-dín and his companions and surrounded them. In the party were three horsemen, Hisám-ud-dín, Rasúl Khán, and 'Abdulláh Khán Warakzái, all the rest were on foot. These latter on seeing the enemy began to divest themselves of their clothes and threw them down. Ghairat Khán Bangash, however, drew his sword and ran at the enemy, and after some passes with his sword, was wounded and fell. Some of the enemy recognizing him, made him a prisoner. The same happened to Rasúl Khán and 'Abdulláh Khán. Hisám-ud-dín with a few men remained standing on one side. Sarfarázá Khán Dílázák, a native of Dhólpúr-Shikárbád, was holding Hisám-ud-dín's horse. He was a great friend and protector of Sáyyads. Hisám-ud-dín said to him, "You see what has happened to the others, what shall we do?" He replied that, when he had taken service, he held it to be part of his duty to give his head for him he served; now that the time had come, to shirk the blow would be a coward's deed. Then calling to his three brothers who stood near, they all four, sword in hand, rushed upon the foe. After a fierce hand-to-hand struggle, they were overcome and slain. Then the enemy's horsemen rode up and surrounded Hisám-ud-dín. Standing at a little distance they cried out to him. "Take your hand from your bridle, "if you want to save your life." He answered that with his horse went his life and his head, should he fall, the horse was theirs. On this they said to each other something in Mahratti, which he did not understand. Then one of them lifted his right hand and hurled his spear at Hisám-ud-dín. It struck him between the side and the left arm. Another spear was thrown by the same man from his left hand. This second spear entered at the right side, and the two spears crossing each other stuck out like the handles of a pair of scissors. The wounds caused Hisám-ud-dín to feel giddy and left him no strength to wield his sword. Just then the shaft of one of those spears fell down, and struck the horse on the crupper. From the blow the horse gave a bound, and Hisám-ud-dín, losing control of him, was thrown, with the two spears still sticking into him like a pair of shears. At once several of the scoundrels got off their horses and making him a prisoner, wrenched the bare sword out of his right hand. Hisám-ud-dín now thought it was all over, and turning his thoughts to Heaven, he humbly prayed to God that, whether his life were taken or not, he might be spared further dishonour. As he lay, he turned his face towards the Ganges, and being on the high bank at the edge of the river, he could see below him a number of Afghás, who for fear of their lives had stripped themselves naked and were crouching in the water. At this moment a fresh party of Mahrattas came up. On seeing them, many of these seated at the water's edge threw themselves into the river; the rest, seeking quarter by putting their fingers between their teeth, were captured and driven off towards the camp.

In a short time some other horsemen rode up and asked Hisám-ud-dín why he was seated there alone. He replied "What else can I do?" They said "Come with us." He said "I am not able to walk." They had with them a wounded horse, which they ordered him to mount. He obeyed and mounting rode with them. The sowars took him straight to Mulhár Ráo, who was standing with his retinue near the Kásim Bágh. Mulhár Ráo said to him, "Did Ahmad Khán cross the Ganges early or late in the night?"

Hisám-ud-dín.—"I do not know."
M. R.—"How can I believe that you could have been in Ahmad Khán's camp without knowing?"
Hisám-ud-dín.—"If I had known I should have gone with the Nawáb."
M. R.—"That is true."

He then ordered one of the horsemen to take Hisám-ud-dín to the tents of Khán Dev Ráo,* where he was to receive every indulgence consistent with his detention as a prisoner. When brought before Khán Dev Ráo, he assigned comfortable quarters to Hisám-ud-dín.

* Khán Dev Ráo was killed at the siege of the Ját fort of Komber in 1755-6. Grant Duff, 284.
Next day Mulhár Ráo, with his chief men, paid a visit to his son Khánde Ráo. Among his retinue was one Shekh Muhi-ud-dín, resident of Narmálpur, in the service of Anthal Ráo, Mukásadáh-dár* of Gwáliyár. This Shekh came up to Hisám-ud-dín, and asked, “What is your name?”

H-ud-D.—“Hisám-ud-dín”
M-ud-D.—“Where is your native country?”
H-ud-D.—“Gwáliyár.”
M-ud-D.—“In what mahalla (quarter of the town) do you live?”
H-ud-D.—“My home is outside the city, they call the place Ghaus-“púr.”
M-ud-D.—“Are you any relation to Ghaus-i-Islám, the saint?”
H-ud-D.—“My grandfather Makhdum Abu’l Hasan (on whom be “peace) was sister’s son, and also son-in-law of Ghaus-i-Islám.”

On hearing this, the Shekh took Hisám-ud-dín to Nawáb Manavar Khán, son of Nawáb Anwar Khán, a descendant of Sháh ‘Isa Burhánpuri. This latter was a disciple of Sháh Lashkar ‘Arif, who himself was a disciple of the saint Mirán Hamid-ud-dín, known as Ghaus Gwáliyári. To the Nawáb he reported minutely all their conversation. At once, the Nawáb came forward out of the group in which he was standing, and with the greatest courtesy approached to Hisám-ud-dín, stated his wish to be his firm friend, and putting him on his own horse, led him away to his house. There he was treated with every kindness. After a time the Nawáb urged Hisám-ud-dín to enter his service, but he refused, saying, “I shall be equally grateful to you, if you will put me across the river Ganges, so that I may rejoin Nawáb Ahmad Khán wherever he may be.” At length the Nawáb gave up his efforts to detain Hisám-ud-dín and agreed to his departure. The day after, he rode in person to the river bank and saw that Hisám-ud-dín got safely across. ‘Abdullah Khán Jama’dar had at that time just crossed with a party of Afgháns and Roheláś. Joining them Hisám-ud-dín set out for the camp of Nawáb Ahmad Khán.

The Campaign in Rohilkhand.

When Nawáb Ahmad Khán saw that all had left him except his leaders and jamádárs, he came to the conclusion that the rulers of Anwaláh had only sent Sa’dullah Khán to join him in order to get rid of Bahádúr Khán. Besides, they may have thought that Ahmad Khán’s soldiers would in despair desert and join them. Although fully aware of all these plans, Ahmad Khán found that the deplorable state of his army made resistance hopeless. Therefore, as already related, he crossed the Ganges and made his way to Anwaláh where the Rohela leaders came out to meet him.

* See Grant Duff, pp. 36, and 98 for meaning of this term.
Hamilton* comments unfavourably on the imprudence of the Rohela policy in allowing a part of their forces to join Ahmad Khan. The answer seems to be ready in the facts of the case, which in Hamilton are substantially as we have given them. Action was taken by the hot-headed youth, Sa’dullah Khan, against the wishes of the more experienced leaders. But having once gained the advantage, it was not likely that the Wazir, still less the Mahrattas, would make any fine distinctions between Sa’dullah Khan’s enmity and the friendly feelings of the rest. The whole Rohela confederacy was to be attacked and swept away.

Consultations were now held between Ahmad Khan and the Rohelas; and the plan at length decided on, was to take shelter at the foot of the Kumáon hills. Next day Nawáb Ahmad Khan with the Rohela leaders, setting out towards the hills, reached Murádábád. It so chanced that there was a halt there of several days’ duration. In this interval messengers brought word that the Wazir, leaving Mulhár Ráo and Apá Sendhiá at Singhi-rámpúr, had proceeded to Lakhnau. On hearing this, the Rohelas told Nawáb Ahmad Khan that they considered it advisable to return to Anwalah, the rainy season being close at hand, during which they could rest undisturbed at home, employing the time on summoning their clansmen from all sides, and making ready to renew hostilities with the Mahrattas. This place was accepted by all, and they returned to Anwalah. The Rohelas went to their houses, and Ahmad Khan encamped outside the town.

When the rains of 1751 were over, preparations were made for a campaign, boats were collected, and a bridge was thrown across the river called the Rám Gángá. This river flows through Rohilkhand and falls into the Ganges on the left side nearly opposite Kannauj, more than forty miles below Farrukhábád. On a report being brought to the enemy of the advance of Ahmad Khan with the Rohelas and other Patháns, they despatched Khânde Ráo, son of Mulhár Káo, with other leaders and a numerous army, across the Ganges, to meet and repel them. Then Ahmad Khan and the Anwalah Sardárs crossed their bridge, and gave strict orders to their men to keep close to the river bank, following its course. The river at one place described a semicircle. Here the Mahrattas had taken up their position, intending to bar the Afghan advance. Donde Khán, who commanded the vanguard, seeing the position occupied by the enemy, came to the conclusion that he could not effect a passage along the river bank. He therefore refrained from continuing his march, and posted his artillery between the two points to east and west formed by the bend in the river. By this manœuvre he cut off the enemy’s line of retreat. When Khánde

* History of the Rohela Afghans, pp. 106 and 108.
Ráo saw that they had fallen into the trap laid by the Patháns and that their retreat was cut off, he sent a man to Nawáb Ahmad Khán to make terms. The messenger said, that though by the Emperor's order they had served the Wázir in this campaign, they were not in heart fighting for him, they only fought to save appearances; what should be now agreed on privately with them, they swore solemnly to carry out in writing, when the campaign under the Kumáon hills had once commenced. Ahmad Khán, on this message being received, sent for Háfiz Rahmat Khán, told him what was proposed, and referred to the old friendship between his father, Muhammad Khan, and the Mahrattas. He then requested Háfiz Rahmat Khán to send orders to Donde Khán to withdraw from his position closing up the Mahratta line of retreat. Háfiz Rahmat Khán in reply said that in time of war, Donde Khán took orders from no one, perhaps if Nawáb Ahmad Khán went in person he might agree, and he, Háfiz Rahmat Khán, was willing to accompany him to the spot.

The order of battle was as follows; To the rear and in support of Donde Khán were Bahádur Khán and Mullah Sardár Khán; after them came Fath Khán Khansáman; and then Nawáb Sa'dulláh Khán with Háfiz Rahmat Khán, who, mounted on one elephant, formed as it were the advance-guard of Nawáb Ahmad Khán. Ahmad Khán and Háfiz Rahmat Khán proceeded to Donde Khán's head-quarters, where they informed him of what the Mahrattas had promised and had sworn an oath to do. He said in answer, that the Mahrattas must have sent overtures only because they were in extremity. For was not the river on three sides of them, and had he not cut off the fourth? Without any labour or trouble a speedy victory would be obtained. Oaths taken at such a juncture were worthless. The Nawáb admitted that what Donde Khán said was quite true, but it was against the creed of a good Musulman to refuse peace to those who asked it. If their oaths were false, God would mete out the punishment. Donde Khán was forced at length to accede, and he sent word to his regiments to withdraw and allow a free passage. The soldiers were then moved off, and the road cleared for the enemy. Then Nawáb Ahmad Khán and Nawáb Sa'dulláh Khán pitched their tents on that spot. Next day they marched onwards, and reached the head of the boat-bridge, thrown across by the Wázir under Singhi-rámpúr.

Before the arrival of the Mussulman forces, the Mahrattas had broken up the bridge, and when Nawáb Ahmad Khán reached the place he found the river separating him from the enemy. Artillery fire began on both sides. The troops who had been allowed to withdraw from their critical position in the bend of the river, gathered round the Nawáb's army but did not come to close quarters. After things had been in this situation for a week, and no means could be found of crossing the river, and the food which the troops had brought with them was nearly exhausted, the Rohela leaders represented the state of affairs to Nawâb Ahmad Khân. He asked what they thought of doing. Háfiz Rahmat Khân then told him that during the night a letter to Sa'dullah Khân had been received from Najib Khân, to the effect that he would arrive shortly with reinforcements. He was advancing down the opposite or right bank of the Ganges. This being the case, they thought it best to march and encamp themselves near Súraj-púr, a ferry in Parganah Kampil, some thirty miles or more above Farrukhábád, and forty-two miles from Singhirámpúr. There they could collect boats, and then crossing the river they could join with Najib Khân in making a forced march against Mulhâr Râo, who had at the moment only a small force. Time must not, however, be given to repair the broken bridge. Therefore, on marching, they would give out that they were retreating to their own bridge over the Rám Gângâ, to replenish their stores of grain; and that having obtained fresh supplies, they would at once re-occupy their old position and renew hostilities. Nawâb Ahmad Khân consented and they marched. The Mahrattas kept up a distant fire as they marched off, but they made no attempt to follow.

Meanwhile the Wazir, who had heard of the Afghâns' attempt, hurried back and crossing at Mahudi ghât in parganah Kannauj, forty miles below Farrukhábád, rejoined Mulhâr Râo at Singhirámpúr on the 9th Muharram 1165 H. (17th November 1751). On his arrival the whole of the guns were fired off as a salute, and the sound excited great consternation in the Paâhán camp. On hearing that the Wazir had arrived, the Paâhán leaders assembled, and after a discussion it was finally decided to march straight to Bangârh in parganah Budaon, ten miles north of Budaon. Bázíd Khân, commander of the artillery, was sent for and received orders to move off with his guns, first firing a salvo from all his pieces. These orders were executed and the artillery set out. The change of plan had not been communicated to the troops. When they saw the artillery being removed, a panic took possession of all except the commanders and other principal men. Not a single man kept to his proper place. When the leaders saw this, they were much cast down, saying to each other, "With-out a battle we have been defeated." Nawâb Ahmad Khân and his men were half a kos distant from Nawâb Sa'dullah Khân's troops, and quite ignorant of what had occurred in the Rohela camp.*

* Here Hisâm-ud-dîn appears to gloss over a defeat which, as is admitted by the Rohela account (Life of H. R. K., p. 42), occurred on the road to Anwalâh. The Mahrattas, they say, had crossed by Kamrol, which is twenty-eight miles above Singhirámpúr. Hamilton (p. 109) places the scene of the defeat at Islâmângar, thirty-
The sun had not yet risen when Sa'dullah Khan, Hafiz Rahmat Khan, Donde Khan, Mullá Sardár Khan, Fath Khan and others rode into Ahmad Khan's camp. The Nawáb was asleep, but Mustajab Khan and Háji Sarfaráz Khan went in, woke him, related what had happened to the Rohelas, and informed him of the presence of Sa'dullah Khan and the others. Then Ahmad Khan sent for his chief men, Rustam Khan Bangash, Sa'dat Khan Afrídí, Mangal Khan, Jamál Khan, Zábta Khan, Muhammad Khan, 'Abdul-lah Khan, Anwar Khan, Sa'dat Khan Toyah, Shamsheer Khan Mahmand, Shádil Khan Ghilzai, and others. He gave orders to Shádil Khan and Sa'dat Khan to move off at once, break up their bridge and direct the boatmen to remove the boats forthwith to Súrajpur ferry. There they were to form a bridge of boats and maintain their position, as he intended to cross the river at that point. To the other commanders he gave orders to arm and be ready. He then directed his march towards the Ganges in the direction of the Rohelas, and taking them with him on his right, they all encamped on a wide open plain. The Rohelas then sought an interview and explained the condition of their troops. They told him that on sending off their artillery to Bangař, their men had scattered, intending to take to flight. With such a state of things existing, it was impossible for them to continue hostilities in the field. The Nawáb said he ought to have been informed of their intentions at once, when they could have concerted other operations. To retreat without giving battle was pitiful weakness and would be so held by all the world. The Rohela leaders held down their heads and spoke not a word. At length they ventured to say, "What is done cannot be "helped, the arrow shot from the bow cannot be recovered." In reply to the Nawáb's further enquiries, they stated that, their army having once lost heart, they had better go to Anwalah, assemble all their families and go with them to the hills. They advised the Nawáb to do the same. The Nawáb, with great reluctance and under compulsion of necessity, agreed to their proposals. At an hour and a half before sunset they started for Anwalah.

Next day, before the setting of the sun, they entered Anwalah, and Nawáb Ahmad Khan took up his quarters in a bāgh inside the town. There he rested for nine hours. When one watch remained to daybreak, he sent for Nawáb Sa'dullah Khan and set out towards the hills. The other leaders had been employed the whole night in collecting their cash and buried treasure, their household effects, the artillery and the rocket two miles north-west of Budāon, but that seems too far to the west. It might be Is-lámganj, close to Allahganj in parganah Amritpur. Perhaps Hisámud-dín, being half a kos off, did not witness the battle, but that hardly excuses his suppressing it, as he must have heard of it immediately afterwards.

train. Then leaving the town in company with their wives and children, they set their houses in flames and marched off. At three hours after nightfall they reached Rámpúr, where they pitched their tents. Next day they marched again and got to the neighbourhood of Murádábád. After a halt of some six hours, they resumed their route for Káshipur, thirty miles north of Murádábád. At that place a spy from Āpá Jiu Sendhiá arrived with a letter for Nawáb Ahmad Kháń. It stated that when the Wazír heard that his enemy was retreating towards the hills, he at once gave orders to his army to cross the river and pursue by forced marches, without halting anywhere. Mulhár Ráo and Tántiá, with thirty thousand men and the Mughal “Kizílbásh,” had been detached on this duty. The letter said that they would soon come up, and Ahmad Kháń had better enter the hills at once and prepare for defence. Ahmad Kháń sent for Háfiz Rahmat Kháń and the other Rohela leaders and informed them of the intelligence he had just received. To the messenger he gave seven gold coins and sent him back.

Without further delay the Patháns started for the hills. The following day they entered the low jungle, and there they found a place surrounded on three sides with impenetrable growth of thorns and bushes. On the fourth side, which afforded a passage, they dug an extremely deep ditch, and along it built towers, which made it look like the fort of Daulatábád in the Dakhin. In the centre of this plain they pitched their encampment.* The Anwalah leaders also put up their tents and, ranging their cannon, connected them with iron chains. Notwithstanding all these preparations, they were much dejected, for they saw no prospect of supplies, and without food the place was untenable. For a time, in default of any thing else, they subsisted upon sugarcane. After two or three days had passed without any change, Nawáb Ahmad Kháń sent for all the Rohela leaders and told them, that although the Omnipotent had favoured them with a refuge, whence they could defy the kings of all the seven elimes, yet it was absolutely necessary to secure food. The Rohelas replied that the Rájáh of Almorah had great affection for Sayyad Ahmad, the Náźim for his territory at the foot of the hills. This Sayyad was, they said, hospitable and kind-hearted and well-affected towards them. They advised that application should be made for assistance in grain, accompanying the letter, which should be in affectionate terms, with rare and costly presents of every kind. The Nawáb having approved of this suggestion, Háfiz Rahmat Kháń, leaving his presence, went straight to the Sayyad, who held a battery with Najib Kháń, and reported to him what had been decided.

* The Life of H. R. K., p. 42, says the encampment was at Chilkya, which is 22 miles N. E. of Káshipur, and some 48 miles N. E. of Murádábád.
upon. He brought the Sayyad to the Nawáb, who gave him a rich present and sent him off to Almorah with the letter. Before the Sayyad reached that place, a wakil from the Wazír had arrived by way of the Mahdi jangal. The Wazir’s message was, that as his enemies had sought shelter at the foot of the hills, it would only be consistent with friendship to cut off all supplies of grain from the fugitives. In return for this favour, the Rájáh would be allowed to take possession of all the Rohela territory. When the Sayyad got to Almorah and delivered the letter and the rare presents, the Rájáh gave the Wazír’s wakil his dismissal, saying it was inhuman not to feed those who took refuge with you. He ordered his managers to direct the villagers near the Nawáb’s entrenchment to carry loads of grain on their heads to the camp. He gave the Sayyad an answer to the letter and sent him back. The Sayyad had not returned before several thousand hillmen appeared in the camp with head-loads of grain, which they at once offered for sale. The men in camp, who were suffering all the pangs of starvation, looking on the arrival of this grain, which to them was “like sweetmeats without milk,” as a special mark of the divine grace, bought each according to his need, and having made a profession of thanksgiving, proceeded to cook and eat. After this the Sayyad returned with a gracious answer, the contents of which were not communicated to any one but the chief personages.

When the Wazír had crossed the river Ganges, he despatched Mulhár Ráo and his troops, giving them strict injunctions to follow up the enemy. But the Mahratta leaders, true to their agreement, made excuses for delay, saying to the Wazír that, as Tántiá-Gangadhár and the Mughals with a large force were already in pursuit of the Afghãns, it would be better to wait and see first what direction the enemy took. When trusty reports were received, a forced march could be made. Soon after, it was reported that Nawáb Ahmad Khán and the Rohelas had gone to the foot of the hills. The Mahrattas made forced marches, till they reached within three kos from the hills occupied by the fugitives. At that distance they encamped, and the Wazír pitched his tents near the village of Chaukya.* Every day the Wazír, keeping to the rear himself, sent the Mahrattas forward to fight. At sunset they all returned to their camp. After having been delayed some time on the road, the Wazír’s artillery arrived, while these daily contests still continued. Next day at sunrise, he mounted his elephant and brought up his guns opposite Ahmad Khán’s battery. The firing, however, was so high that all the shot passed quite over the battery attacked and fell beyond the camp in the plain behind. In this plain, which was about a square kos in extent, the shot fell like a heavy shower of hailstones. The firing lasted from morning till night. Night had hardly fallen, when, as a precaution, the cannon were dragged away and placed near the Wazir’s camp. These tactics were pursued for two months, without any effect having been produced on the Pathans. A stream of water which flowed from the hills hindered the Wazir’s operations. The Rohelas had dug a channel from this stream, and they led the water all round their entrenchments. Mulhár Ráo and Súraj Mall Jáṭ tried in vain every expedient to discover a way of entrance.

* This name I have not traced. Hamilton (p. 110) says the Afghãns went to “a short distance above Lall Dong.”—The life of H. R. K. (p. 42) says, the encampment was at Chilkya, which is about 22 miles north-east of Kâshipúr.

During this time, the Wazir’s agent at the Emperor’s Court had written, in one of his news-letters, that spies had reported to his Majesty the approach of Ahmad Sháh Durráni, who was coming to the aid of his fellow-clansmen, the Afgháns. The Durráni had issued orders to the Afgháns of the hill-country to gather on the banks of the Indus and there await his arrival. The letter went on to say that, when his Majesty heard this report, he became very anxious and said to Nawáb Firúz Jang, "What shall we do? Safdar Jang, with my troops and the landholders from all parts, is gone on a foolish campaign, nor does it yet appear that he has either overcome Ahmad Khán and the Rohelas, or that he is likely to overcome them." Firúz Jang, making a low obeisance, said his presentiments were coming to pass, and he had already warned the Emperor. As Náźir Jáwed Khán’s advice had been followed, it would be best to ask him now what should be done. The Emperor admitted that this was true, yet since man was compounded of error, he thought that it was not fitting for Firúz Jang to refuse to give advice. Then Firúz Jang said he thought a note (shukka) should be sent to inform Safdar Jang that, owing to Ahmad Sháh Durráni’s approach, it was desirable to make peace with Ahmad Khán. He proposed to confide the message to ‘Ali Kuli Khán, the six-fingered.* Accordingly ‘Ali Kuli Khán had, the Wakil reported, been sent to Safdar Jang with a shukka from the Emperor.

Attack by the Atiths of Rájah Indar Gir.

The Wazir concealed this intelligence even from his greatest intimates. Next day, he sent for Mulhár Ráo, Apá Sendhiá, Tántia-Gangádhar and Súraj Mall Jáṭ. He said to them that, though two months had elapsed they were no further advanced than on the first day, in fact, they had given no assistance. Apá Sendhiá, anticipating the others, said in reply, that they were used to fight in the open, not against entrenchments or fortresses. Indar Gir Atith then said, that their enemy was in the open, not in either entrenchment or fortress. The only obstacle was the water. Now, there were two corners, where there was no water, one to the east and one to the west; that to the east was the battery of Najib Khán and Sayyad Ahmad, that to the west was defended by Nawáb Ahmad Khán. If any one chose to take the slightest trouble, they would gain a victory. Āpá Sendhiá said to him, “You, too, are in the service of the Nawáb Wazir, wherfore do you not take this trouble you speak of?” Rájah Indar Gir said, that the next day he would make an assault on the battery of Nawáb Ahmad Khán, and he would take it unassisted. By the Wazír’s good fortune he would bring Ahmad Khán alive a prisoner, or else he would bring his head on the point of a spear. The Mahratta leaders said, that nothing could be better than this, and taking leave of the Wazír they rose and departed. When they reached their tents, Āpá Sendhiá sent word to Nawáb Ahmad Khán that he might expect next day an attack by Rájah Indar Gir Atith, who would, they hoped, be killed or defeated.

* Wali-ullah, p. 175, shows that this was an epithet applied to ‘Ali Kuli Khán, Wálíh, Dághístání, for whose biography, see the "Khizána ’Amíra," p. 446.

When night had passed and the sun arose above the eastern horizon, Rájah Indar Gir’s fifteen thousand men, horse and foot, all Atíths and Nágás, each having a musket and rockets, were passed in review by the Wazír and despatched to the assault. Before he set out, Indar Gir requested the Wazír to make a feigned attack with the Mughals and “Sher-bacha” in the direction of Najib Khán’s and Sayyad Ahmad’s outwork, in order to draw all the Patháns to that quarter, leaving Ahmad Khán’s battery unprotected. The Wazír did as requested, and the fighting began. Rájah Indar Gir posted himself in a hollow and awaited a favourable moment. The Mughals did their best. But Najib Khán maintained his position, and called to his friends to cease firing and await the near approach of the enemy, and then meet them with the sword. Najib Khán sent a message to Mullá Sardár Khán and Donde Khán, asking them to leave their own posts, thinking the main attack was directed against him. Háfiz Rahmat Khán, on seeing that Najib Khán was attacked, rode off to Nawáb Ahmad Khán. Before he arrived Ahmad Khán had mounted his elephant and had taken up position in his battery. Háfiz Rahmat Khán came up and represented that the chief attack that day was against Najib Khán. The Nawáb replied, that the attack on Najib Khán was entirely a feint, the real attack by the Atíths would be made there, on Ahmad Khán’s entrenchment. He therefore requested Háfiz Rahmat Khán to return to his own battery. Then the Nawáb ordered all his own leaders to be on the alert. At an hour and a half before sunset the Atíth’s troops began to show in the open. The Pathán commanders asked for leave to draw up their men in battle array. The Nawáb told them to offer up a prayer.
(Fātahā-i-khair) and then go at the enemy. All the leaders and Pāthāns, raising their hands to heaven, offered up a prayer and went at the Atith.
Both sides began with musketry fire and discharged rockets. For nearly an hour, the fight was thus continued; at length, the Pāthāns began to advance, and coming to close quarters, made play with their swords. Under the force of the attack the Atīths began to withdraw. The chela of Indar Gir, who commanded on the part of his Guru, seeing that the Atīths and Nāgās were turning their faces, dismounted from his horse and atttempted to rally them. He called on his personal followers to draw their swords and make a rush. They obeyed this order and fought most bravely.
Many were killed, the rest were scattered. Then the Atīth commander himself, sword in hand, came to the front. He was met by a Pāthān with bared sword. After some thrusting and parrying, the Pāthān cut the Atīth down, and severed his head from his body. When the Atīths saw that their leader was dead, they took to flight.

Rājah Indar Gir, perceiving the turn affairs had taken, quitted the field of battle. The Pāthāns followed in pursuit up to the entrenched camp of the Wazīr, where they arrived about sunset. The sun having set, darkness succeeded, so that one man could not recognize another. Soon the Nawāb's messenger came up with orders recalling them from the pursuit. They set fire to the Wazīr's gun-carriages, and with the baggage they had plundered returned to their entrenchments. The principal men presented themselves before the Nawāb and offered him gifts in honour of the victory. The Nawāb gave them due praise and thanks in a kind and gracious manner.

The Wazīr, when he heard of Indar Gir's defeat and the death of many Atīths, became greatly perturbed, issued from his tent, got upon his elephant and set out towards Kāshipur. At once, on hearing of the Wazīr's flight, Mulhār Rāo and Āpā ordered out a large force and followed him.
On reaching Kāshipur, they drew up and cut off his retreat. Then going to him, they said that, although the Pāthāns had repulsed Indar Gir, there was no occasion for this excessive timidity. Indar Gir had but received the due punishment of his pride. In short, Mulhār Rāo and Āpā Sendhia prevented the Wazīr from carrying out his foolish intentions, which were quite contrary to the dignity of his station. Then the Wazīr marched back and re-occupied his former encampment. The daily attacks with artillery were at an end, owing to the gun-carriages and material having been burnt by the Pāthāns.

Visit of the Almora Rājah.

At the suggestion of Sayyad Ahmad, the Rājah of Kumaūn agreed to pay a visit to the camp. Taking with him several thousand infantry, the Rájah, seated on a gilt throne and clad in jewelled raiment, descended from the hills. Nawáb Ahmad Khán went out to meet him, and when they came close, they both saluted at the same moment. The Nawáb brought the Rájah to his own quarters and seated him on a separate masnad. Presents were then brought of all the choice products of Hindustán, including an elephant. Of all the things placed before him, the Rájah selected two rúmāl and refused the rest. Sayyad Ahmad knew the Rájah’s dialect, and whatever the Rájah said was explained by him to Nawáb Ahmad Khán. After a short interval, the Rájah rose and taking his leave of the Nawáb went to his own camp. Next day the Nawáb returned the Rájah’s visit. The Rájah came out in state to greet him, and they proceeded in the most friendly manner, hand in hand, into the Rájah’s tent, where the Nawáb was conducted to his seat on a costly masnad. He was then presented with hill products, such as hawks and falcons, and other birds used in falconry, bags of musk, chaur (?) and gold ingots, called in Hindi suna-sunqad,* which have a perfume like essence of roses. There were also several hill ponies (Tángan) of various colours, the like of which would not often be found. The Rájah also gave several kinds of jewels, rare and of great price. At first the Nawáb refused those gifts. The Rájah, seeing that his present was not accepted, said to Sayyad Ahmad in his own tongue that he knew the things were not of sufficient value, but he hoped that to give him pleasure the Nawáb would accept them. Then the Nawáb, to please him, accepted all the things. The day after this, the Rájah took his leave and returned to his home in the hills.

* Negotiations through 'Ali Kuli Khán.

Meanwhile the difficulties of his undertaking were troubling the Wazír day and night. About this time, 'Ali Kuli Khán, the six-fingered, the 'Abási, a descendant of the kings of Wiláyat, reached camp with the imperial letter, under the Emperor’s own signature, directing that peace should be made with Ahmad Khán. The shuḵká was handed to the Wazír, and the messenger delivered the Emperor’s verbal message, with reference to the approach of Ahmad Sháh Durráni. The Wazír represented to 'Ali Kuli Khán that, if the first proposals for peace proceeded from him, his reputation would be gone for ever. He asked advice as to how negotiations should be begun. 'Ali Kuli Khán replied that he and Ahmad Khán Ghálib Jang, were old friends and acquaintances, that if the Wazír

* Perhaps the same as referred to in the following passage, “In Garhwal there “is a vein of iron pyrites, which the people call ‘sou-ká-pathar,’ or gold stone, and “sell them to the pilgrims to Badrinath at high rates.” Economic Mineralogy of Hill districts of N. W. P. by E. T. Atkinson, Allahábad, 1877, p. 30.
approved, he would seek an interview and turn Ahmad Khán's mind towards peace. The Wazír was highly delighted at this suggestion.

'Ali Kuli Khán sent off a formal letter stating how desirous he was of paying a visit to Ahmad Khán. On receiving it, Ahmad Khán sent for Háfiz Rahmat Khán and the other Rohela leader, and informed them of its contents. They all agreed that it would be well for the Nawáb to receive the proposed visit, as 'Ali Kuli Khán was his friend. Ahmad Khán sent a reply saying, that there had been no need to ask for leave, his house might be looked on by 'Ali Kuli Khán as his own. 'Ali Kuli Khán having informed the Wazír of this favourable reply, the Wazír made him swear by his head that in no way would he let Ahmad Khán know of the desire to make peace. 'Ali Kuli Khán said, he might feel quite at rest, for the degradation of the Wazír would, in his opinion, be a dishonour to the Emperor.

On 'Ali Kuli Khán approaching the Nawáb's battery, the Nawáb's son, Mahmúd Khán, was sent out to escort him. On their meeting, they embraced affectionately, and then mounting the same elephant, they started for the Nawáb's tent. The Nawáb rising from his seat advanced to the edge of the carpet, and there they embraced. Thence hand in hand they walked to the masnad. A friendly conversation began and lasted a long time. 'Ali Kuli Khán was then conducted to a tent, which had been prepared for his repose, where every kind of food was made ready and sent to him. In the evening Nawáb Ahmad Khán walked to his guest's tent. At first they talked as friends and then they turned to business. The note, which the Emperor had written to Ahmad Khán with his own hand, was brought out. Taking it in his hand, Ahmad Khán placed it on his head, rose from his seat, turned his face towards Delhi and made a low obeisance. He then read the note. The contents were made known to no one but the principal leaders. It was only after a time that, through the commencement of negotiations, it was seen that the Emperor had recommended peace. Ahmad Khán, after he had read the letter, asked what he was expected to do. 'Ali Kuli Khán told him he should send his son, Mahmúd Khán, and Háfiz Rahmat Khán back with him, in order that the world might see that, although the Wazír had failed, yet as "ul-amr faut ul-adáb" (an order supersedes ceremony), he, Nawáb Ahmad Khán, had obeyed the Emperor and had sent his son and the principal leader under Sa'dullah Khán to negotiate with the Wazír. In this way the Wazír's honour would be saved, and thereby the Emperor's dignity preserved. Ahmad Khán objected that in this matter he could not act till he had consulted others.
Accordingly, Nawāb Ahmad Khān mounted and went to Sa'dullah Khān’s camp. Hāfiz Rahmat Khān and the others were sent for, and the Nawāb laid all the facts before them. Mullā Sardār Khān, the oldest present, took up the word and enquired what force Ali ʿKuli Khān had with him. Ahmad Khān asked what he meant by that question. Sardār Khān replied that a strong powerful leader was required, who could oppose the Wazīr, if need arose—one who could enforce the terms granted. He preferred making overtures through Mulhār Rāo and Ṭāpā Sendhiā. But, under no circumstances, could he approve of allowing the Nawāb’s son to go to the Wazīr. Hāfiz Rahmat Khān might go or not as he pleased, for he was a private friend of the Wazīr’s. Ahmad Khān, turning to Sardār Khān, said he highly approved of his remarks, and he would act accordingly. He then rose and returned to his own quarters. Next day, he said to Nawāb Ali ʿKuli Khān that, though he fully trusted him personally, the Rohela leaders objected to allowing his son to go to the enemy’s camp. On hearing this, Ali ʿKuli Khān said, “By God, your advisers are sharp-witted and far-seeing. My wish was as they have counselled, my heart’s desire has been fulfilled, for all I wanted was to turn your thoughts towards peace.” The Nawāb replied, “My friendship to you is firm like an engraving on stone.”

After this interview, Ali ʿKuli Khān took his departure and returned to his own camp. He then sought an interview with the Wazīr and related in detail all that had passed. He pointed out that, although he had brought Ahmad Khān to entertain thoughts of peace, the condition was that the negotiations be conducted through Mulhār Rāo and Ṭāpā Sendhiā. Khānde Rāo must therefore be sent to bring in the Nawāb’s son and Hāfiz Rahmat Khān. The Wazīr sent for Mulhār Rāo and Ṭāpā Sendhiā and requested them to arrange for bringing in the Nawāb’s son. On his arrival they could come to a decision. The two Mahrattas professed their willingness, if nothing was intended which could force them to act afterwards in opposition to the Wazīr. The Wazīr out of regard to his own honour was obliged to promise that no treachery was intended. Then Mulhār Rāo sent his son, Khānde Rāo, with an escort, to conduct the Nawāb’s son to the Wazīr’s camp. Ṭāpā Sendhiā had already sent word to Ahmad Khān, desiring him to make no objections to sending off his son.

Meanwhile Khānde Rāo and the escort had come near the battery and drew up close to it. Word was brought of his arrival. Forthwith Mahmūd Khān was sent for and, after the Nawāb had whispered in his son’s ear a few words of advice, two hundred trusty horsemen were ordered out to accompany him, one of them being our author, Hisām-ud-dīn. On the part of Sa’dullah Khán was deputed Háfiz Rahmat Khán. When Khánde Ráo saw the young Nawáb approaching, he descended from his elephant, and embraced him with the greatest respect. They mounted their elephants again, Khánde Ráo taking up a position behind the young Nawáb and in this order they went forward, till they came close to the Mahratta camp. Mulhár Ráo, Apá Sendhiá, Tántiá and others rode out to greet him. When they came opposite the Sáhibzáda, they all dismounted and embraced him. After this, Mulhár Ráo took him to a tent and seated him on a masnad, the Mahratta leaders taking place around him. Presents were then laid before him of choice products of the Dakhin. A few were accepted, the rest, including a horse and an elephant, he left with them.

The Mahratta leaders next proceeded to the Wazír and desired that persons of suitable rank might be sent to conduct the young Nawáb to the Wazír's presence. Orders were given to Nawáb Sálár Jang* and Áli Kuli Khán. The Mahrattas returned with them, and on reaching the proper distance they drew up. On hearing of their arrival, the young Nawáb and Háfiz Rahmat Khán marched out of camp. When he saw them in the distance, Nawáb Sálár Jang began to advance, and coming near he descended from his elephant, and they embraced. They then returned together towards the Wazír's camp. At a little distance the Sáhibzáda halted, whereupon Mulhár Ráo and Apá Sendhiá asked the reason. Mahmúd Khán requested them to precede him and obtain the Wazír's consent to the admission of his escort, for he wished the whole of his companions to be present at the interview. They went on as desired and came back with the necessary permission. Ismá'il Khán was at the same time told to go to the gate and see that no opposition was offered to the entry of the Nawáb's followers.

The Mahrattas then escorted the Sáhibzáda towards the Wazír's audience tent, where he was seated awaiting them. The enclosure (strá-cha) had three courts. The Sáhibzáda traversed two courts, and then dismounting from his elephant, he got into a palki. The other chiefs got off their elephants at the gate of the first court, and there entered their palkis. At the third gate the Sáhibzáda stopped and told his followers to enter first. When they had done so, he followed and halted. Then Mulhár Ráo and Apá Sendhiá advanced to the spot, helped him out of his palki and went forward with him.

On reaching the edge of the carpet, he made a low obeisance. The Wazír exclaimed, "Welcome!" and extending both hands clasped him to

* I presume this must be the third and youngest son of Ishák Khán Mutaman-ud-daula, whose daughter was married to Shuja'-ud-daula. Nájm-ud-dín Ishák Khán, the eldest son, was killed at Rám Chatauni, see p. 74. his breast and gave him a kiss on the forehead. This mode of salutation is, among the Mughals, a proof of the greatest affection and condescension.
Then the Wazir invited him to take a seat at his right hand, on a masnad placed on a line with his own. The Sáhibzáda, taking some gold coins in his hand, presented them as an offering. The Wazir graciously remitted the “nazar,” but the Sáhibzáda insisted, when the Wazir smiled and accepted the gift. After this the young Nawáb sat down, and the Wazir took his hand and, holding it to his breast, began a friendly conversation.
In the course of it, the Wazir said “Paṭháns do not flee, how is it your “father has run away so far?” Mahmúd Khán replied, “My father is only “a half-breed.” The Wazir asked what that meant. The Nawáb explained, thus, “My father’s mother was a Mughal and his father a Paṭhán, when “he follows his father he fights boldly, and when he takes after his mother’s “qualities, he runs away.” By this answer the Wazir was silenced, for he was himself a Mughal. In a short time, the Wazir turning to Mulhár Ráo and Ápá Sendhiá, said he had not eaten any food, would they kindly take their leave of Bábá Mahmúd Khán. The two leaders rose, mounted and went away to their own camp. The Wazir took Mahmúd Khán and Háfiz Rahmat Khán to his private tents and called for food. It was sent to the guests through Bálá-ulláh Khán. When the meal was finished, the Wazir directed Ismá’íl Khán to pitch tents for their reception on the right side of his own private enclosure. As soon as the tents were ready Mahmúd Khán and Háfiz Rahmat Khán took their leave.

When one watch of the night had passed, several thousand armed Mughals, by order of the Wazir, took up their position round the tents of the visitors. When the Nawáb’s people became aware of this, each man went separately and told his own master. The Mahrattas’ spies were of opinion that some treachery was on foot, and in great agitation they started to report to their chiefs. Khánde Ráo, as soon as he heard the report, without referring to his father, mounted and rode in hot haste to the Wazir’s camp. There he saw that one thousand Mughal troopers were drawn up round the young Nawáb’s tents. Immediately he gave orders to his troops to attack those despicable fellows and disperse them. Hearing these orders, the Mughals made off. Entering the enclosure, Khánde Ráo found Mahmúd Khán and Háfiz Rahmat Khán with all their men drawn up, sword and shield in hand, ready for the fray. Seeing Khánde Ráo, the young Nawáb laughed and said, “I prayed God that I might get “near the Wazir, and the Omnipotent has heard me. Now my wish is, if “you will join me with your brave followers, to give the Wazir a taste of “my quality.” Khánde Ráo replied, that the Wazir should be left to himself to bear the disgrace of what he had done, and that Mahmúd Khán ought to come away at once. They all mounted and rode off together; and leaving the Mahratta camp on the left, they turned towards the foot of the hills. When they were not far from Ahmad Khán’s camp, Khánde Ráo took his leave, and returning made a minute report to his father.

Before Khánde Ráo got back, Mulhár Ráo and Āpá Sendhiá had been to visit the Wazir, and they told him how wrong it was to ask their intervention when intending treachery. They used some very strong language. The Wazir expostulated mildly, asking them what they were thinking of to use such hard words without any enquiry. The truth was, he said, easily found out by asking ’Āli Kuli Khán, a trusted friend of Ahmad Khán. When ’Āli Kuli Khán came, the Wazir requested him to relate the facts. He stated that, knowing the Wazir’s men to bear a deadly grudge to the Afgháns, he feared that they might attempt to use force, by which the Wazir’s good name would be destroyed, he had therefore asked the Wazir to post a guard of a thousand Mughal horse round the tents of the Pathán guests. This explanation was received as quite satisfactory.

Intrigues in the Pathán Camp by Mabhúb ’Alam.

After the failure of the first negotiation, another plan was hit upon. Mabhúb ’Alam, a native of Shamsábád, was a man of learning and intelligence, who, through Mír Kudrat ’Āli Khán, had obtained employment in the Wazir’s service. On account of his wisdom, the Wazir thought highly of his advice. One day the Wazir said to him “I have tried every device to overcome these Patháns, but the words of the sacred writing have been fulfilled ‘the few shall overcome the many.’ As you are a clever man, tell me in what way I can best overcome my enemy.” The Sayyad made a low bow and said, “This man of mean understanding has a plan, but hitherto he was afraid to disclose it, for he is not one of the old servants, and, may be, this slave’s remarks would not meet with approval.” The Wazir replied, that he thought more of him than he did even of his old servants, and he begged him to express his ideas without ceremony, for there was nothing to fear. Then the Sayyad went on, “Gracious master, peace be on you! the first question is this, does my lord seek the death or capture of Ahmad Khán alone, or does he rather aim at extirpating the whole race?” The Wazir answered, that his enemy was Ahmad Khán; with the others he had nothing to do; but as they had joined Ahmad Khán, he had been led to attempt the destruction and extirpation of the whole Pathán race. The Sayyad then asked, what would happen to the other Patháns if they quitted Ahmad Khán and presented themselves to the Wazir? The Wazir declared that, according to their merits and station, he would treat them with consideration; to those who were men of rank he would give dignities and grants of land revenue; the rest he would entertain in his army. The Sayyad then said, that if such were the Wazir’s intentions, then in his humble opinion it would be well to write parwánahs to each man separately under the Wazir’s own seal. These parwánahs should then be made over to him, Mahbúb 'Alam, with a written order in such terms as to the Wazir might seem meet.

The Wazir directed Sayyad Manavvar to convey an order to his secretary to make out parwánahs, according to the instructions of Sayyad Mahbúb 'Alam, to whom those written orders, when ready, were to be made over. Kudrat 'Ali Khán and Mahbúb 'Alam then took their leave and went to the secretary. After the orders were written out, they were taken to the Wazir for approval; they were then delivered to Mahbúb 'Alam at Mír Kudrat 'Ali Khán’s tent.

Now Mír Muazz-ud-dín, son of Sháh Khatír-ud-dín Gwáliyári, was a brother’s son of Hisám-ud-dín’s father. He was in the direct employ of the Emperor, but he happened to be present at that time in the Wazir’s camp. The Kudrat 'Ali Khán above referred to had a community of belief with him, and looked up to him with great respect. The reason was, that Kudrat 'Ali was a descendent of Sayyad Hasan Dánishmand of Dáipúr. This Sayyad Hasan Dánishmand was himself a successor (Khaliífah) of Mirán Hamíd-ud-dín Hazrat Muhammad Ghaus Gwáliyári. By chance. Mír Muazz-ud-dín paid a visit to Kudrat 'Ali Khán’s tent. Mír Mahbúb 'Alam, through the said Khán, had struck up a friendship with Sayyad Muazz-ud-dín, and in conversation he had learnt that he was a cousin of Mír Hisám-ud-dín, and was further his devoted friend. Accordingly, he asked Muazz-ud-dín to write a letter to Hisám-ud-dín, asking why he was throwing himself away in company with Ahmad Khán, who would soon be slain or captured; that on reading the letter, he should at once desert alone to the other side, without caring for his property, which would be fully replaced. As soon as he joined he would, by God’s grace, be presented to the Wazir, from whom he would receive a title and a grant of land revenue. Mír Muazz-ud-dín Khán, as requested, wrote a letter to the above effect, and made it over to Mír Mahbúb 'Alam. The latter also wrote letters from himself to all his acquaintances of Mau and Shamsábád, stating that he had interceded for them with the Wazir, who had promised to entertain them all in his own service, in token of which he had caused shukkas (notes) to be written to them, impressed with his own special seal. He prayed them to make no delay, but come over at once. Putting up together all the parwánahs and his own letters, he despatched them by a messenger in the Wazir’s employ, under the charge of his own private servant, Bhai Khán, to Nawáb Ahmad Khán’s camp.
Sáhib Dád Khán Khaṭak and Mír Mahbúb 'Alam had both been together in the service of Shámsír Khán, chela, and from being together, a firm friendship had sprung up between them. They had two bodies but one heart. In fact it was in reliance on Sáhib Dád Khán that Mahbúb 'Alam had undertaken this affair. Bhái Khán, Khidmatgár, found the tent of Sáhib Dád Khán Khaṭak, and made over to him the whole of the parwánahs and letters. He then asked his way to the tent of Hisám-ud-dín, to whom he delivered the note from Mír Muazz-ud-dín Khán and demanded a reply. When Hisám-ud-dín had opened and read the letter, he sent a reply to the following effect: "You think I have got into a difficult position by espousing Nawáb Ahmad's Khán's cause. This idle thought you must put far from you, for one hundred thousand brave men, more or less, with their leaders, all carrying on their bodies their grave clothes, are in the train of Ahmad Khán and prepared to conquer or to die. Now, to slay those who already believe themselves dead, is a task of extreme difficulty.

Har kih dast-i-khweshtan az jón ba-shust
Khúd ba-mánd, o dashman-i-khúd rá ba-khusht
Murda, mígábad níját az dast-i-naut
Zinda-há úrá namáyand jumla pusht.

"Even if it were true that the Wáźír would shortly slay or capture the Nawáb, I ask you one question:—Suppose that the Wáźír were in danger from Ahmad Khán, and I wrote to you, requesting you to forsake the Wáźír, and save your life by coming over to our side, I ask if you would not hold it your duty as a leader and a Sayyad to prefer death to disgrace? You would not forsake the Wáźír, so what you would not do yourself, you should not advise others to do. I beg to be excused from obeying such a foolish request." This answer was made over to Bhái Khán, and he returned to Sáhib Dád Khán's tent. The latter's answer was as follows:—"I have distributed the parwánahs and letters; hereafter I will report the result. I object to keeping the messenger here, as it will get me into trouble, I therefore send him back." The messenger received these two letters and set out on his way back.

Now the thieves and plunderers among the Rohélas, who infested the camps of Ahmad Khán and Sa'dullah Khán, were unequalled in the arts of thieving and highway robbery. They were in the habit of hiding on the right and left of the batteries. At night they used to repair to the Wáźír's camp, where they seized horses, camels and equipage of all sorts, with which they returned to their own camp. After disposing of the property, they would return to their hiding-places. By chance, the carrier of the two letters passed close by where these robbers were concealed. The thieves seized him, and carrying him off to Nawáb Ahmad Khán's quarters, reported the matter. The Nawáb called in the arrested messenger and asked on what business he had come to the camp. The man, in a great fright of losing his life, told the whole story, as already related in detail. He ended by delivering up the two letters he was carrying back. When the Nawáb had looked at these two letters, he sent for Hisám-ud-dín. Hisám-ud-dín had already heard that the Afgháns had arrested the messenger and had carried him before the Nawáb.

On his reaching the presence, the Nawáb said to him, "O Hisám-ud-dín! who is this Muazz-ud-dín with whom you correspond?" Hisám-ud-dín replied, "Gracious Master! he is my brother." The Nawáb asked what he had written, and he answered that what he had written was lying before the Nawáb, there was no need to repeat it. Rustam Khán Bangash, Hájí Sarfaráz Khán and Mustajáb Khán were present. Addressing them, the Nawáb said—"This Hisám-ud-dín is a man of noble race, who respects the "salt he has eaten, see what a good answer he has written to his own "brother." He then began to read the letter aloud to them. They were all loud in their expressions of praise. Then turning to Hisám-ud-dín, he said, "You have fully acted up to what I expected from you; please God, "I will in time repay you for being thus true to your salt." Sending for Háízí Rahmat Khán, Donde Khán, Mullá Sardár Khán, Fath Khán and Sayyad Ahmad, the Nawáb told them everything that had occurred. Their opinion was demanded. Sayyad Ahmad stated that his subordinates were posted everywhere from the foot of the hills down to Pílbhí, he would write telling them, that if any one from the camp passed, in an attempt to desert, they should without fail slay him and appropriate his goods. Then the five Rohelas left. The Nawáb directed Hájí Sarfaráz Khán to turn the captured messenger out of the camp, which was done accordingly.

Renewal of Negotiations, followed by peace.

Affairs on the enemy's side were meanwhile as follows. Some Rájájah of the west country had written to Mulhár Ráo and Apá Sendhíá that Ahmad Sháh Durráni was on his march to help the Afgháns and had already crossed the Indus. He was reported to be advancing by rapid marches. This information caused great anxiety to the Mahrratta leaders, and they assembled for consultation. They came to an unanimous determination and then proceeded to the Wazir. They reproached him for having concealed from them the report of Ahmad Sháh Durráni's approach.
They said he was aware of the state of both his own troops and of the Mahratta army, that they had become dispirited and hopeless from the difficulty of the task before them. Further, that owing to the effects of the hill water, death came on them unawares. 'As life is dear to all, a complete panic had arisen, and should the men hear that Ahmad Sháh was coming, they would begin to desert. It was for the Wazír to decide and for them to obey. The Wazír was thrown into great perplexity, and after a considerable pause he said he threw the responsibility of deciding upon them. The Mahrattas advised him to sheathe the sword and send off 'Ali Kuli Khán to Ahmad Khán with a message. He should say that, by the Emperor's orders, the Wazír drew back his hand from war; Ahmad Khán too should therefore respect the Emperor's word and make terms. Ahmad Khán should be allowed to retain the ancient territory, which had belonged to his father and brother, on condition of presenting a fine (nazrána) of 30,00,000 rupees. As security for the payment of this fine, he should be required to make over half the territory, till the whole of the money was paid. These proposals were agreed to by the Wazír, and he requested the Mahrattas to name one of their trusted agents to go with 'Ali Kuli Khán. Mulhár Ráo and Ápá Sendhiá named Tántiá Gangádhar, their Diwán.* The two messengers then departed.

But, unknown to the Wazír, the two Mahratta leaders had instructed Tántiá to inform Ahmad Khán, at a fitting opportunity, that they wished him to accept without quibble the terms to be named by 'Ali Kuli Khán. The aspect of affairs made this desirable, but they were still his well-wishers and they hoped he would depute his son to hold an interview with the Wazír. On reaching Ahmad Khán's camp, 'Ali Kuli Khán proposed that they should visit the Nawáb together. Gangádhar excused himself and said he would pay his respects the following day. 'Ali Kuli Khán went on to Ahmad Khán. After some ordinary conversation, business was begun, and 'Ali Kuli Khán delivered his message, mentioning that Gangádhar, the representative of the Mahrattas, would pay the Nawáb a visit the next day. Tántiá visited the Nawáb the following day, and the Rohela commanders were sent for. Mulla Sardár Khán was of opinion that the matter should be left in the hands of Mulhár Ráo and Ápá Sendhiá. To this the Nawáb consented, 'Ali Kuli Khán and Tántiá Gangádhar were sent for, and Ahmad Khán said to them that out of a desire to satisfy those two Mahratta chiefs, he agreed to make over half his territory, till such time as the sum of thirty lakhs of rupees, the fine imposed by the Emperor, should be realized.

* Apparently the same as Grant Duff's Gangádhar Yeswcnt (Bombay ed., pp. 338, 340). By the usage of the Dakhin, Yeswcnt would be his father's name. Grant Duff does not give him the epithet of Tántiá.
Ahmad Khán then proceeded to 'Ali Kuli Khán's tent, and there he declared that it was only in obedience to the Emperor that he had consented to terms of peace. He sent for a secretary, and caused a letter to be written embodying the terms proposed by the Mahratta leaders. This letter he made over to Tántiá, telling him verbally that it was on his responsibility that the young Nawáb was permitted to go to the Wazir. One account states that the terms were engraved on two copper plates, which were interchanged between the Mahrattas and Ahmad Khán.

When Mahmúd Khán and Háfiz Rahmat Khán approached the Mahratta camp, the leaders, Mulhár Ráo, Apá Sendhiá, Patél Ráo, Antámán Gir and others came out to meet them. Next day Mulhár Ráo and Apá Sendhiá rode up to a short distance from the tents and sent on Tántiá Gangádhar to ask the visitors to come with them to the Wazir. After the interview was over, the Wazir ordered his quarter-master-general (Mír Manzíl) to send on his tents, as he intended to march. Next morning the march commenced, and after some days they reached the banks of the Ganges. Then the Wazir directed Mulhár Ráo and Apá Sendhiá to proceed to Kanauj, while he went on to Lakhnau, taking with him Mahmúd Khán and Háfiz Rahmat Khán whom he proposed to dismiss, when the business had been settled. As directed, the Mahrattas crossed the Ganges and quartered themselves in Kanauj. But Gangádhar, their Diwán, was sent with the young Nawáb, at the head of ten thousand horse.

Soon after the departure of the opposing army, Nawáb Ahmad Khán and Nawáb Sa'dullah Khán, leaving their entrenchments in the hills, put up their tents where the Wazir had been encamped. Thence they marched by stages to Anwalah. In that town there was a halt of several days. Resuming his march, Ahmad Khan set out towards Farrukhábád—Ahmadnagar, where he soon arrived and entered the fort. The date of his return must have been some time in the early part of the year 1752.

During this time the Wazir had arrived at Lakhnau. Four or five days afterwards, he sent for the young Nawáb and Háfiz Rahmat Khán. First he bestowed on Mahmúd Khán a khila't of seven pieces and made over to him a grant confirming his father's territory to him. He also conferred on him the title of Káim Jang. He then gave him leave to return to Farrukhábád. Háfiz Rahmat Khán also received a dress of honour. Then a grant was handed to Tántiá, making over half of Ahmad Khán's territory to the Mahrattas, till the Emperor's nazárána was paid, they receiving the country in satisfaction of the arrears of pay due to them by the Wazir.

Mahmúd Khán and Tántiá taking their leave marched westwards, and Háfiz Rahmat Khán started for Anwalah. When the young Nawáb drew near to Kanauj, all the Mahrattas came out to meet him and prepared entertainments. After a stay of two days, he resumed his march to Farrukhabad. On reaching his destination, he visited his father, and from him he received the house of Ja'far Khán as his dwelling. After this the Wazír came from Lakhman to Kanauj; thence taking with him Mulhár-Ráo and Apá Sendhiá, he moved by way of Itáwah towards Delhi.

Some time after this, Ahmad Khán sent Muhammad Jahán Khán to Delhi, to fetch his wife and family. Dulhín Begam accordingly returned to Farrukhabád. Then the Nawáb's brothers, brother's sons, and chelas, with their families, great and small, and all the ryots, returned each to his own place of abode in the different quarters of the city. Sáhib Begam, the widow of Káim Khán, also returned and took up her abode in the fort of Amethi; and Máliya Begam, the Bibí Sáhibá, occupied the Buland Mahal, which had formerly been in the possession of her son, Káim Khán.

Ahmad Khán marries again.

As the Nawáb's affairs were now prosperous, he gave himself up to amusement and pleasure and came to the determination to marry a new wife. His courtiers told him of a young girl who was, they considered, fitted to be his bride. A man of noble family by both parents, a descendant of Nawáb Khán Jahán Khán, who held high rank in the reign of Shábjáhán, had by unstable fortune been reduced to poverty. By accident he had taken up his abode in the town of Shamsábád. After a time, he had departed from this world, leaving a widow and a young daughter, named Khair-un-nissa. It so happened that Yákút Khán, Khán Bahádúr, had obtained this girl from the widow and had adopted her as his own. She was still a virgin and living in the house of the deceased Khán. The Nawáb hearing this story fell in love with her without seeing her. He sent for her and placed her in the Khás Mahal; and, after the wedding preparations were made, he was married to her. From that time he never left her for a moment. These words were always on his lips—

Sharáb do-sálah o ma'ashúk sezdah sálah,
Hamín bas ast baráé suhbat-i-saghír o habír.

"I like my wine two years old, and my mistress to be sixteen."

After a time, in the year 1171 H. (Sept. 1757 to Sept. 1758), a son was born to her and gifts were distributed to the poor. The Nawáb opened the Qurán to search for the child's name. The letter D was the result. He then sent for astrologers and ordered them to draw up the child's horoscope. The name fixed upon was Daler Himmat Khán. An announcement of the event was sent to the Emperor with fitting gifts. There were great rejoicings.
First visit of Gházi-ud-dín Khán 'Imád-ul-mulk.

During Ahmad Sháh Duráni's fifth expedition, in 1170 H. (26th Sept. 1756, 15th Sept. 1757), Gházi-ud-dín obtained his leave to raise a fine from the country between the Ganges and the Jamna. His object would appear to have been to force money from Shuja'-ud-daula, Nawáb Wazír of Audh. Accompanied by two princes of the Delhi house, Hídáyat Bakhsh, son of Šáhid I'llah II, and Mirzá Bábar, son of that Emperor's brother, 'Azuddín, and the Durání troops under Ján Báz Khán, Gházi-ud-dín Khán proceeded to Farruhbád. He had sent on his own troops under Mír Yahyá Khán, son of Zakariya Khán. Ahmad Khán came out to meet his visitors and presented appropriate presents. The army soon after crossed the Ganges and marched as far as the stream called the Garrah, on the boundary of the Audh territory. Shuja'-ud-daula, leaving Lakhnau, came out as far as Sándí and Páli, sixty-eight miles west of that city, in order to oppose the invaders. At length, by the good offices of Sa'dullah Khán Mohéla, the matter was settled by a payment of five lakhs of rupees. On the 7th Shawál 1170 H. (25th June, 1757), Gházi-ud-dín Khán and the two princes re-entered Far-ruhbád.

Meanwhile Ahmad Sháh Duráni had retreated rather suddenly from Muthúra to Delhi; and there, on the recommendation of the Emperor, who complained of 'Imad-ul-Mulk, the Durání king appointed Najíb Khán to be Amir-ul-Umrá, and left him in charge of the capital. 'Imad-ul-Mulk immediately retaliated by creating Ahmad Khán Amir-ul-Umrá, and by appointing him to the post of imperial Bakhshí.* Gházi-ud-dín Khán

* It appears from the Táríkh-i-Muzaffarí that this appointment was renewed by Sháh 'Alam. When, on the 5th Rajab 1175 H. (30th January, 1762), Shuja'-ud-daula was invested with the office of Wazír, Ahmad Khán was made fourth Bakhshí.
Ahmad Nawab
in 1879.1 marched for Delhi, joined by some of Ahmad Khan's troops, and by the aid of the Mahrattas he speedily expelled Najib Khan.

This visit must have laid the foundation for the friendship between Gházi-ud-dín Khán and Ahmad Khán, a friendship so strong that after his public life was over, the fallen Wazír found an asylum for at least nine years in Ahmad Khán's capital. We shall come to the details of his second visit further on.

Ahmad Khán at the battle of Pánipat.

When Ahmad Sháh Duráni entered India for the sixth time, in the year 1173 H. (25th Augt. 1759—13th Augt. 1760), Ahmad Khán went with the Rohela leaders to pay his respects to the invader. They were introduced to him at Koil on the 4th Zí'1 Haj 1173, (18th July, 1760).* The defeat of Dátáji Sendhiá took place shortly afterwards.

Ahmad Khán must have made more than a nominal submission to Ahmad Sháh, for we find him forwarding supplies to the camp under a large convoy. Holkar, who had escaped from the defeat, was near Agra and, hearing of this convoy, crossed the Jamna. He took or destroyed a great part of the supplies and then retired again across the Jamna. A body of Afgháns were, however, detached from their main army and, overtaking him by a prodigious march, routed his troops with great slaughter.

Ahmad Sháh, after moving across the Jamna, took up his quarters at Anúpshahr. After some time Shuja'-ud-daula was induced to give in his adherence. The local chroniclers assert that this was effected through Háfiz Rahmat Khán and Ahmad Khán. Soon Sadasheo Bháo arrived from the Dakhin with an immense army, under Jankojí, son of Apá Ji Sendhiá, Ibráhím Khán Gárdí, Mulhár Ráo and others, in order to avenge the defeat of Dátáji. On the 25th October, 1760, Ahmad Sháh marched from Anúpshahr and crossed the Jamna about twenty miles above Delhi. Ahmad Khán Ghálíb Jáng was present with a contingent of five thousand men. The Mahrattas proceeded to entrench themselves at Pánipat, and Ahmad Sháh encamped opposite them. Daily skirmishing, varied by one or two partial engagements, went on for more than two months, till the Mahratta supplies failing entirely, they were forced to risk a general action.

The story goes that Ahmad Sháh Duráni offered a reward of one rupee for every Mahratta head. Ten thousand horsemen were sent out daily to plunder villages and cut off supplies. These men used to capture any lagging groom, grass-cutter or petty dealer they came across and, producing the captive's head before the king, they received a rupee for each head. Hearing of this, Nawáb Ahmad Khán said to his arz-begi (chamberlain),

* Life of Háfiz Rahmat Khán, p. 59.
Musharrif Khán, that he would give two rupees for each Mahratta brought in alive. The Duránis then began to bring in their prisoners alive. The Nawáb paid for each the sum of two rupees, and then at midnight he let them go free. On reaching the Bháo’s camp, they were loud in their praises of Nawáb Ahmad Khán. Shuja’-ud-daula and Najíb Khán reported this matter to the Durání king, and from that day he was displeased with the Nawáb.

In order to augment this displeasure those two nobles also remarked that Ahmad Khán, although Amír-ul-Umra and Bakshí of the Empire, had brought a very insignificant force. The Sháh made no reply. But Sháh Wali Khán, his Wazír, and himself of the Bangash clan, who happened to be present, sent for Ahmad Khán. On his appearing, the Wazír rose to greet him and gave him a place by his side. Then turning to him, he said, “O Ghálib Jang! you are one of the great nobles of Hindustan, yet you have brought with you a very small force. What is the reason?” Now Ahmad Khán had already heard, through Jang Báz Khán Bangash, of the evil speeches of his enemies. In reply to Sháh Wali Khán, the Wazír, he said that he had left his bakhshi at Farrukhábád with a large force to guard his house; for Gobínd Pandít had advanced from Bundelkhand with three thousand men and, having crossed the Jamna, was encamped on the banks of that river. If he had left no troops behind, his capital and his house would have been plundered. Further, with this same small army he had once defeated Safdar Jang and his immense force, including Suraj Mall, Rájah Himmat Singh and other Rájahs. If he had wished, he could have then marched on Delhi, but refrained out of respect for the presence of the Emperor. Sháh Wali Khán said he had already heard in Kábul reports of what was referred to. The Nawáb ended by saying that the quality of his army, though it was small, would be seen in the day of battle.

Opposed to Ahmad Khán’s battery was that of Ibráhím Khán Gárídí who commanded twelve thousand regular infantry. One dark night, this Ibráhím Khán gave orders that, as Ahmad Khán’s battery was weaker than that of any other noble, he would at that point make a night attack. In the last watch of the night Ibráhím Khán’s troops attempted to surprise the battery. Ahmad Khán's guns were, however, all in order, and many had iron shields (k = chadaren). As it was the cold season, there were watch-fires here and there, at which the camp-followers and labourers were warming themselves. These men, hearing the tramp of horses' hoofs, called out to each other that the Mahrattas were on them. They snatched up some lighted wood from the night fires in pieces of broken pottery and threw them on the port holes of the guns and "chádar," which all went off together. A number of the enemy were slain and the rest fled. On Ahmad Khán's side not a soul was hurt. All this was done without the Nawáb being disturbed. At dawn the Durrání king visited the field of battle. Ahmad Khán went out to meet him, when he said that he had now seen, with his own eyes, proof of that bravery of which he had heard. He took off his jigha* and made a present of it to the Nawáb. After that his enemies were abashed and silenced.

* Gárídí was the name given to the regular infantry disciplined after the European manner. (Grant Duff, p. 315.) The translator of the “Seir-Mutáqharín” (Calcutta, 1789, Vol. III, p. 152), says that Ibráhím Khán was a very thin black man, much pitted with the small-pox, who had in his early years been Chobdar to a French officer at Pondicherry. He rose in the French service to be a Commandant of their disciplined sepoys. He then went over with his men to the Mahrattas and took service with Sada Sheo Bháo.

On the day of the great battle (7th January, 1761), Ahmad Khán was directed to guard the women, his force being so small. The Nawáb refused indignantly, saying, that such work was fit for eunuchs, he would fight in the front. The Abdáli king then sent him to the right wing. It was here that the first attack was made, and after a contest in which Ibráhím Khán Gárdí was wounded, the Mahratta gained the advantage. In this emergency Ahmad Khán sent his darogha, Musharrif Khán, to Ahmad Sháh asking for aid. When the messenger reached the king, Shuja'-ud-daula and Najíb Khán stated that the enemy was not opposed in great force to Nawáb Ahmad Khán, that the need for reinforcement was greater with 'Ináyat 'Ali Khán, son of Háíz Rahmat Khán. When Musharrif Khán reported that no reply had been given by the king, he was sent back with a still more pressing message. At length two divisions were ordered out, and these having strengthened the right wing, the Mahrattas were gradually driven back. Biswás Ráó having been killed, Sadasheo Bhao fled, all became confusion, and by two o'clock in the day the field was won.

Dáim Khán, chela, used to relate that when Ahmad Khán was sent for after the battle to receive a khilat, he sat down by the entrance of the tent. Shuja'-ud-daula took up the Nawáb's sword and pulled it out of its scabbard. There was no edge on it, the Nawáb using it in a particular way. Shuja'-ud-daula in a moeking manner said—"Are you a commander of Fifty-two "thousand and own such a sword as this?" The Nawáb replied, "The "edge of this sword was felt by your father well." He referred to the defeat and flight of Safdar Jang. Nawáb Najíb Khán, Rohela, who was a great friend of Shuja'-ud-daula, then asked for the sword and, having looked at it, praised it ironically and begged it as a gift. Nawáb Ahmad Khán told him to take it. Najib Khán said, “Steel should not be received for nothing;” so he sent for a paisa (copper coin) and, putting it on both hands, offered it with mock respect to Nawáb Ahmad Khán. The Nawáb taking it up said, “It is right and proper that you should offer me a nazar, for “you were once in my father’s service.” This was true, for Najib Khán began life as a Jama'addár on five rupees a month under Muhammad Khán Ghazanfar Jang and then entered the service of the elder Gházi-ud-dín Khán on seven rupees a month. The first interview was accorded to Nawáb Ahmad Khán, and by special permission he was allowed to take in with him three persons to hold him up. They were Fakhr-ud-daula Bakhshi, Mihrbán Khán Diwán and Dáim Khán. Sháh Wali Khán, the Wazír, being of the same clan, had recommended Ahmad Khán, and in this way he obtained the first entry. When all the other amírs were admitted, the king gave Ahmad Khán the order to sit down.

Visitors to Farrukhábád.

During the latter part of Ahmad Khán’s life, from 1759 to 1771, there were a number of distinguished visitors to Farrukhábád. Many of the Delhi nobles sought shelter there, on the breaking up of the imperial court and the occupation of the capital by the Mahramtás. When 'Abdulláh Khán, son of 'Ali Muhammad Khán, Rohela, attempted to assassinate Háfiz Rahmat Khán, it was to Farrukhábád that he fled, and it was through Ahmad Khán’s intercession that he obtained pardon, and the parganah of Aujháni was granted for his subsistence.* And, owing to the grant of the parganahs of Shikohábád, Phaphond and Itáwah, made to the Rohelas by Ahmad Sháh on his departure from India, Háfiz Rahmat Khán in 1762 passed through Farrukhábád with his son, on his way to visit his new territory.† Again, after the battle of Bak-sar on Oct. 23rd, 1764, Shuja'-ud-daula came for a time to Farrukhábád. Ahmad Khán could at one time boast of having two ex-Wazírs of the Empire encamped at opposite gates of his city—'Imád-ul-Mulk at one and Shuja'-ud-daula at the other gate.

The most important group of visitors, however, was composed of Gházi-ud-dín Khán 'Imád-ul-Mulk, his relations and friends, who for many years found an asylum with, and lived upon the bounty of, Nawáb Ahmad Khán. Of each of these we proceed to give such details as are known.

1. Gházi-ud-dín 'Imád-ul-Mulk.

Mír Sháháb-ud-dín was the son of Mír Muhammad Sháh, entitled Gházi-ud-dín Khán Firúz Jang, eldest son of the celebrated Nizáín-ul-Mulk Asaf Jáh. His mother was a daughter of the well known Wazír,

* Life of Háfiz Rahmat Khán, pp. 46, 47.
† Life of Háfiz Rahmat Khán, pp. 67, 77, 79.
Kamr-ud-din Khán 'Tímád-ud-daula. 'Imád-ul-Mulk's career from 1752 to 1760* is sufficiently well known. From the date, however, when he ceased to play a prominent part, we are told nothing more of him than that he took refuge in one of Suraj Mall's fortresses. In one work we are told that he was found by Colonel Goddard at Surat in 1790;† and that, by order of the Supreme Government, he was sent off to Mecca, whence he never returned. How far this statement is correct will presently be shewn. The Khizána 'Amíra, which was written in 1762-1763, naturally concludes 'Imád-ul-Mulk's story by leaving him hiding in the Bhartpur country. But there can be no doubt that his family and friends were sent to Farrukhábád, and that from at least the year 1762 he himself lived there constantly. The quarter of the city where he lived, near the Kádirí gate, is still known as the Kháoni or encampment of Gházi-ud-dín Khán. The income of Parganah Bilbor, said to amount to Rs. 12,000 a month, was allotted to him by Ahmad Khán during his stay in Farrukhábád.

In 1771, when Ahmad Khán died, and the Emperor Sháh 'Alam was approaching Farrukhábád, Gházi-ud-dín Khán, fearing vengeance for the murder of Alangír II, the Emperor's father, thought it advisable to quit that city. He left his relations and servants there and started with a few faithful retainers. We do not know how the interval was passed, but the Ma'ásir-ul-Umrá says, that in 1187 H. (March 1773—March 1774), he appeared in Málwá, where the Mahrattas gave him several mahals for his support. We learn from the Tárikh-i-Muzaffari that he was found by Colonel Goddard at Surat in February 1780. Thence he was despatched on a pilgrimage to Mecca. Returning by Basrah, he travelled to Kábul and Kandahár, where he visited the ruler, Taimur Sháh, son of Ahmad Sháh Durrání. At that time the prince Ahsan Bakht, son of the Emperor Sháh 'Alam, who, after the blinding of his father by Ghulám Kádir Khán (June 1788), had escaped from Delhi, and had wandered homeless through Rajputána, past Jainagar, Bikánér, and Múltán, arrived at Taimur Sháh's court. Out of regard for him as a descendant of the great Taimur, as a relation of Sháh 'Alam, and as a guest, to whom the rights of hospitality were due, the king treated him with consideration. He sent some of his own troops to accompany the prince and 'Imád-ul-Mulk towards Múltán, promising to march soon in person for the conquest of Hindústán. Shortly after this the king died‡ and was succeeded by his son, Zamán Sháh, who was detained at home by his own rebellious subjects. When Ahsan Bakht and 'Imád-ul-Mulk reached Sind, the Kábul troops, hearing of the death of Taimur Sháh, returned to their home. 'Imád-ul-Mulk and Násir Khán Bilích went to Baháwalpur. In time a quarrel arose between the prince and 'Imád-ul-Mulk, owing to many of the prince’s companions being mean and base fellows. The prince remained in Multán, where he became afflicted with melancholy madness and passed the rest of his days there out of his senses. Meanwhile 'Imád-ul-Mulk found his way to 'Ali Bahádur Mahratta, son of Shamsher Bahádur, who had an army and some territory in Bundelkhand. From him he obtained a grant of fifty-two villages, which formed the petty state, now known as Báoni, measuring about fifteen miles across each way. It lies about 12 miles east of Kálpi, in a bend of the river Jamna.* 'Imád-ul-Mulk died at Kálpi on the 10th Rabi II, 1215 H. (1st September 1800), when his age must have been about sixty-eight. According to the orders contained in his will he was buried at the shrine of Shekh Faríd Shakkarganj at Pákpaštán.† His son, Nasír-ud-daula, was in possession when the British occupied Bundelkhand in 1803, and to him the grant was confirmed by the Governor-General’s letter of the 24th December 1806. The further history of the family will be found in the Gazetteer, under the article Báoni.

* Elphinstone, 651—659.
† A mistake for 1780. See Wilson's Mill, VI, 37 note, from which the statement is taken.
‡ Taimur Sháh died on the 7th Shuwwál 1207 H. 18th August 1793. (Tárikh-i-Ahmád of 'Abd-ul-Karím.)

By 'Umdah Begam, daughter of Mu‘ín-ul-Mulk, the son of Kamr-ud-dín Khán, who was Wazír from 1721 to 1749, he had one son called 'Ali Jáh; and by Gunná Begam, daughter of 'Ali Kuli Khán, Daghístáni, poetically styled Wálíh, he had one son, Nasír-ud-daula. By another wife he had a son, Ghulám Jaláni Khán, who died at Delhi from eating ice. The Ma‘asír-ul-Umra tells us that he had a large family, and one of his sons finding his way to Haidarábád was, on account of his relationship to the reigning house, made a Panj Hazari, with the title of Hamíd-ud-daula and a money allowance.

Gunná Begam, 'Imád-ul-Mulk’s wife, came to Farrukhábád with him. Herself a poet, she was the daughter of the poet, 'Ali Kuli Khán, known as Wálíh. Her tomb is at Núrábád, sixty-three miles south of Agra and fifteen miles north of Gwalíyár. It bears the short inscription “Alas! Gunná Begam” 1187 H. (25th March, 1773—14th March, 1774.)‡

2. Nawáb Khádím Husain Khán.

He had a house near that of Nawáb ‘Azim Khán, and when he died he was buried in that house. He received a jágir of Rs. 15,000. After

* Gaz. N. W. P. I, 384 and Aitchison’s Treaties III. 250, under the word Báoni.
† In the Panjab, ten miles west of the Rávi—Thornton, 737.
1879.] W. Irvine—The Bangash Nawabs of Farrukhabad. 131
the death of Siraj-ud-daula, Nazim of Bengal, in June 1757, he had obtained a grant of the Purinaya Subah, on condition of recovering it at his own expense. He had been in the service of a former governor there, Sayyad Ahmad Khan. He was not really Mir Ja'far's nephew, as he claimed to be. He was the son of Sayyad Khaidim 'Ali Khan by a Kashmiri wife, and his father afterwards married a sister of Mir Ja'far (Seir Mutaqherin, II, 9, 10, 11.)

He was the son of Mír Jumla Farrukhsiyari, and brother of Sharía-yat-ullah Khán. This latter, on the dismissal of 'Azím-ullah Khán, was promoted to be Sadr. He died on the 2nd Rajab, 1155 H. (24th August 1742), and on the 2nd Zi'íl Ka'd, 1156 H. (7th December, 1743), 'Abdí-ullah Khán, was appointed to the vacant office. On the arrival at Farrukhabád of this Nawáb, Wali-ullah saw him and praises his great learning. After the death of Nawáb Ahmad Khán, he left Farrukhabád and went to live at some place where he died. He received Rs. 500 a month.

He was the eldest son of Khán Bahádur Zakariya Khán, the Muhtasib of Delhi. He turned faqír and was then styled Yahya Sháh. He was buried at Yahyaganj, a village near Shekhpúr on the Cawnpur road or, as some say, in Kamálganj. Khwájah Dáud Khán was a son of Yahya Khán, by the daughter of 'Itímád-ud-daula Kamr-ud-din Khán Wazír, and his mother, being the aunt of 'Imád-ul-Mulk, was known as the Khálá Begam. Dáud Khán died in Farrukhabád. Sháh Naváz Khán, the younger brother of Yahya Khán, died at Lahor. His son Mirzá Ján and his friend, Maulvi Rahím Yár Khán, Bukhári, came with the others to Farrukhabád, where they both remained till they died. Mir Mughal, a son of Rahím Yár Khán, became náib to Nawáb Muzaffar Jang, and was afterwards exiled.

5. Nawáb Salim Khán.

His house was behind the Tikona Thána in the city. It was afterwards inhabited by Faiz-ullah, a Khawás of Nawáb Muzaffar Jang, and his descendants in 1839 still lived there.

He had been Subahdár of Bengal. He was paternal uncle's son (cousin) to Nawáb 'Ali Jáh, i.e., Kásim 'Ali Khán, Subahdár of Bengal. There is a Katra (or Bazar) Bú 'Ali Khán, probably named after him. He left Farrukhabád in 1771, on Ahmad Khán's death.

7. Choṭe Sáhib.
8. Bare Sahib.

Bare Sahib was Kamr-ud-din Khan Wazir's sister and Chote Sahib was his widow. They had a house in Nawab 'Abd-ul-Majid Khan's garhi. They received jointly Rs. 500 a month. Once a year Nawab Ahmad Khan visited them, when they presented him with trays of jewels. Miyan La'il, guardian (atālik) to Muzaffar Jang was their eunuch (khojā). They both died in Farrukhábád, and their graves are behind Pandit Daya Ram's house, in Muhalla Cháoni, within the bāgh of Shuja't Khan, Khansámán to Nawab Ahmad Khan. The place is called the Madrassa. Miyan La'il is buried at their feet. Mir Bahádur 'Ali is careful to point out that their names never received the feminine termination in long i.

Son of Sayyad Gharib-ullah, son of Sháh Ghulám Muhi-ud-din, a native of Newatnī,* Bángarmau Mohání. The Hakim lived in Mohalla Lohái and received Rs 500 a month.

They say that Ján 'Ali Khán, chela, who built the masjíd at the gate of the fort, had a great affection for this Hakim, with whom he exchanged turbans. When the Hakim went away to Delhi, Ján 'Ali Khán asked him for a prescription by which his strength would remain unimpaired. The Hakim answered, that the following was the essence (atā) of all his books. "At the morning meal, take one quarter seer of kid's flesh and one chiták ghí, eat it cooked as you are used to; then in the evening prepare washed másh dál and the same quantity of ghí." Ján 'Ali Khán eat this food all his life, and his strength did not diminish.

He had been Subahdár of Kábul at the time of Nádir Sháh's invasion (1151 H. = 1739). He lived in Mohalla Kandhá, where Núroz 'Ali Khán, son of Sarfaráz Mahal, lived in 1839. His allowance was Rs. 3000 a month. He died in Farrukhábád and was buried in the Haiyát Bágh, near the tomb of Nawab Muhammad Khan Ghazanfar Jang. He died before 1771.

They say that the eldest son of Nawab Násir Khán was in the service of Shuja'ul-daula and received a large sum monthly. One day Shuja'ul-daula told him to send to Farrukhábád for his father, as he wished to appoint him his náib. Násir Khán refused the offer. He held the three thousand rupees he received from Ahmad Khan to be equal to three lakhs; for Ahmad Khan, when he went to visit him, rose to his feet to receive him. But if he became náib to Shuja'ul-daula, some day when he rode up to his gateway, the

* A small town, two miles south-west of Mohán in the Unáo district.—Oudh Gaz. III. 16, II. 500, and I. 224.

He lived opposite the house of Mir Roshan 'Ali, an employé of Muzaffar Jang's.

He lived close to Hāji 'Abbūdullāh Khān (No. 12) and he received five hundred rupees a month. His son, Mirzā Khair-ullāh Beg, was a poet and a man of parts. On his father's death, he became a fākir, when he passed by the name of Kamṭar Shāh. His poetical name was Kamṭar. He it was who always read aloud in Nawāb Amīn-ud-daula's Imāmbāra; he lived at the gate of that Nawāb's old fort. He died in 1240 H. (20th August, 1824—16th August, 1825.)

Formerly Mir Atash or Commandant of Ordnance and Subahdār of Gujrat. He lived in a line with the house of Mir Roshan 'Ali: his allowance was Rs. 500 a month. His grandson, Mirzā Zaḥīne, a disciple of Maulvī Wali-ullāh, was alive till Nawāb Shaukat Jang's time (1813—1823), and his (Mirzā Zaḥīne's) sons, Mirzā Sādīk and Mirzā Ja'fār, were in 1839 among the Nawāb Raı̂s' sowārs. The grandmother of Mirzā Zaḥīne, Gümānī Begām, got old Amethi, on the river, between the city and Fathgarh, from Nawāb Muzaffar Jang as nānkār, with the land occupied by the fort of Zu'līkārgāf, since resumed by the English. Ahmādī Begām, granddaughter of Haidar Khul Khān, was still living in 1839 in the Ǧhīnī Wālā ward, with her sons, Mirzā Haidar and Mirzā Muḥammad.

Own brother to Haidar Khul Khān (No. 14). He died and was buried at Farrukhábād.

A Bhāt by caste. He is said to have spent a fabulous sum at Delhi upon the marriage of his son, the earthen huqqa stands (gurguri) costing many thousands of rupees. He was the agent at Delhi of Mahábat Jang, Subahdár of Bengal. We have already seen him employed by Safdar Jang to carry out the resumption of the Farrukhábád territory after the death of Káim Khán.

Once Nawáb Ahmad Khán, Gházi-ud-dín Khán Wazír, and Rájah Jugal Kishór were returning to Farrukhábád from a visit to Makhánpur.* Their three elephants were moving in one line. In the plain of Nanauwah, on the road from Yákútganj to the city, close to where the central jail now stands, the Rájah got down for a necessary purpose, when the elephant ran at him and killed him. All his servants set up weeping and wailing; while Nawáb Ahmad confiscated the whole of the property to his own use. In this affair, Nawáb Ahmad Khán and Gházi-ud-dín had given the hint to the Rájah’s Mähaut, Jugal Kishór having one day been wanting in proper respect to those two nobles. No doubt Ahmad Khán also bore him a grudge for the part he had played in Safdar Jang’s time. Jugal Kishór’s grandson, Shítábú, was still alive in 1839, his house was in Mohalla Núnhai, and at the Holi festival, in the drama (swáng) of the Jogís, he used to dress as a female mendicant and dance.

His house was in Mohalla Nitganja. He was a great favourite of ’Imád-ul-Mulk, and they attribute to his bad advice the blinding of Ahmad Sháh, and the murders of ’Alamgír II, Intizám-ud-dáula Khán-khanán, and ’Akábát Mahmúd Khán. He received Rs. 400 a month, and left Farrukhábád with his patron.

18. Nawáb Ra’áyat Khán.

He was the son of Zahír-ud-dáula ’Azímulláh Khán (Subahdár of Málwa, and afterwards Sadr), son of Ra’áyat Khán, younger brother of Mohammád Amín Khán. Ra’áyat Khán’s mother was Núr-un-nissa Begám, sister of ’Itímdád-ud-dáula Kamr-ud-dín Khán. Ra’áyat Khán married a cousin, the daughter of Kamr-ud-dín Khán. He left Farrukhábád upon the death of Ahmad Khán in 1771. The Tárikh-i-Muzaffári also mentions a brother, Kútbe Khán, as being at Farrukhábád (year 1176).

Commonly known as Nawáb Sháh Jiú. He was the son of ’Itímdád-ud-dáula Kamr-ud-dín Khán, Wazír, and husband of the daughter of Muzaffár Khán, brother of Samsám-ud-dáula, Khán Daurán Khán. He received Rs. 1000 a month, and on the death of Ahmad Khán he returned to Delhi, where he died.

* In Pargánah Bilhor of the Cawnpúr district.

He was sister’s son of Sayyad Sádát Khán Farrukhsiyari, who after the death of Asaf Jáh was for a short time Amír-ul-Umrá, with the title of Zu’lilákár Jang, his nephew being made Bakhshi of the Aḥadís. Ahmad 'Ali Khán lived in Mohalla Ismá’ilganj in the house known as the Rájah’s. His allowance was Rs. 300 a month; he died at Farrukhábád.

Son of Ḥamíd-ud-dín, Namícha, 'Alamgírí. He lived in Mohalla Nit-ganja in a hired house. He was very friendly to Sayyad Ahmad 'Ali (father of Muftí Wali-ullah) and kind to Wali-ullah himself. When Sháh 'Alam returned to Delhi, the Nawáb followed him and died there. His sons were friends of Wali-ullah, being of the same age. One, Mirzá Mughal, was a poet.

22. Nawáb Daráb Khán.

Son of Tarbíyat Khán, a noble of Muhammad Sháh’s time (1718—1749). He died and was buried at Farrukhábád.

In the reign of Muhammad Sháh (1718—1749) he was the agent at the Delhi Court for Nawáb Aṣaf Jáh Nizám-ul-Mulk. Wali-ullah visited him several times. He was turned out of Farrukhábád in the days of Bakhshi Fakhr-ud-daula (1771—1773).

24. Manavvar Khán.

The younger brother of Nawáb Roshan-ud-daula Bahádur Sarwar (?). The Tárikh-i Muzaffari also names a son of the latter, Anwar Khán, as present at Farrukhábád (year 1176).

He was the son of Sáid-ud-dín Khán, Mír Atash in the reign of Muḥammad Sháh.

Son of Nawáb A’zim Khán.

27. Ghulám Hussain Khán.

His name is given in the Tárikh-i-Muzaffari. He was the grandson of Mu’in-ud-daula Dildaler Khán Naṣír Jang, son of Mír Yahya Khán Munshi (?).

He had been darogha of the household (i'tbâ'-khâna) to Kamr-ud-din Khán, Wazir. He got Rs. 150 a month.

At this period many other jagirdârs, pensioners and dancing women from Delhi took refuge in Farrukhábâd. The wakils of the following rulers also attended there upon Gházi-ud-din Khán 'Imád-ul-Mulk, viz., those of the Rájah of Jaiñagar, the Rájah of Narwar, the Raæhaur Rájah, Rájah of Jodhpur, the Ját Rájah (Súraj Mall) of Díg and Kumer, Rájah Chatar-pat of Gohad, the Rájahs of Bundelkhand, i. e., of Pannah, Orchha, Datiya, Seonîha and Chanderi, the Rájah of Kôtâb-Bondi, of Sháhábâd-Kuroki, of Bhadáwar-Jagammanpûr and others.†

Shuja'ud-daula and Shâh 'Alam attempt to attack Farrukhâbâd.‡

When Shâh 'Alam returned from his unsuccessful campaign against Bengal, Shuja'ud-daula moved out to meet him as far as Saræ Rájá, near the Karamasa, in the Benares district, and conducted him thence to Jáïmâu, by way of Jhúsi and Allahábâd. After the rains, in Rabi 1175 H. (October 1761), the Emperor moved to Kálpi and thence to Jhânsi. On their return to Allahábâd, some time in the year 1176 H. (23rd July, 1762—12th July, 1763), Shuja'ud-daula persuaded the Emperor to join him in a campaign against Ahmad Khán of Farrukhâbâd.

Three reasons are assigned for this attack on Naváb Ahmad Khán. The first, which was no doubt used to influence the Emperor, was as follows. The news-writer sent letters to Shuja'ud-daula, informing him of Ahmad Khán's daily life and stating that he rode in a pâlki, that he caused elephants to fight, that he had established a Gûlâl bârî or royal pavilion, and had assumed other privileges of royalty. Shuja'ud-daula writhed like a snake when he read this, and at once he made a minute report to the Emperor, adding that to mount the throne was the only step, which now remained for Ahmad Khán to take. The Emperor, being incensed at Ahmad Khán's supposed presumption, readily agreed to join in the campaign.

A second reason, and probably a better-founded one, is said to have been a quarrel over the occupation of the territory evacuated by the Mah-

* Both in Bhartpur territory, the former 20 and the latter 10 miles north of Bhartpur.
† This list is taken from Shâh Hisâm-ud-din's book.
rattas, after the great defeat at Panipat in January 1761. The Mahrattas withdrew from the Duáb, and Ahmad·Khán took possession of all the parganahs ever held by his family, and perhaps of some to which he had no claim. On the other hand, Shuja'-ud-daula wished to maintain him within the limits fixed by the treaty of 1752 and asserted his own right to all the recovered territory.

Another motive, which acted strongly on Shuja'-ud-daula, was the shelter given to Umráo Gir Gusín. Umráo Gir had fled from Lakhnau with Hatya, a favourite dancing girl of the Nawáb's, and came to Farrukhábád with his twelve thousand fighting Nágás.* He encamped in a bágh near the city, and was introduced through Fákhru-d-daula, Bakhshi. The Nawáb determined to retain the Gusín in his service, although his advisers tried to deter him, pointing out that the Gusín's contingent was too powerful, nor had they money to pay him. Ahmad Khán said he could not turn away a supplicant, a thing he had never done. Umráo Gir was sent to Kásganj to Roshan Khán, chela, (known as Miyan Sáhib), then 'Amil of the eight and a half maháls.

Himmat Bahádúr wrote to his brother, remonstrating with him for leaving the master who had brought them up and joining a ruler whose

* Anúp Gir Himmat Bahádúr and his younger brother, Umráo Gir, were chelas of the Rájah Indar Gir (or Gáj Indar Gir) whom we met before at the siege of Allahá-bád (p. 79) and elsewhere. The original abode of this Gusín was in the jungle near Moth, in Bundelkhand, thirty-two miles from Jhansi. About 1744-5 he acquired many villages in that Parganah (Gaz. I. 550). In 1750 he entered Safdar Jang's service, and in 1752 he was killed near Delhi. Himmat Bahadur (Anup Gir) died in 1804 at the age of seventy, when Narindar Gir, his son by Fakhru-n-Nissa Begam of Lakhnau, was still a minor. By article 3 of the Agreement, dated the 4th September, 1803, made with Himmat Bahadur, it appears that Rájah Umráo Gir, his brother, was then in confinement at Lakhnau, on account of a conspiracy against the Nawáb Wazir's government.—Aitchison, II, 225, ed. 1876. By a grant, dated the 1st March, 1806, the assignments in Bundelkhand were exchanged for a territory in the Cawnpur district, named Rasdhan, about forty-three miles south-west of Cawnpur city, in Parganah Sikandrah, which lies in the south-west corner of the district between the Jamna and the Sengar. This estate yielded a revenue of Rs. 1,357,000 a year. The families of Umrao Gir and Kanchan Gir also received pensions (Gaz. I. 41.) On Narindar Gir's death in 1840, the estate was sequestrated in payment of debts by order of the 12th May, 1841. The debts had barely been cleared off when the mutiny of 1857 broke out. Jai Indar Gir (son by Lálán Begam) and Padam Indar Gir (son by Ruba Begam) became rebels, and two-thirds of the parganah was confiscate. The two brothers were given an allowance of Rs. 100 a month. Jai Indar Gir died in June or July 1876; the other brother survives. One-third of the income, amounting to Rs. 28,780 a year, is paid to the widow of Narindar Gir, known as the Ráj Rani, who for the last thirty years has lived in the city of Cawnpur.
income was not sufficient to provide for the pay of his force. Umrao Gir replied that, to vex Shuja'-ud-daula, he intended to stay a few months, and if by his aid the Nawab obtained nothing, he should not ask for pay. Himmat Bahadur showed the letter to Shuja't 'Ali Khan, chela, known as Miyan 'Ise, and he told Shuja'-ud-daula. The latter wrote an angry letter to Ahmad Khan, ordering him to turn out his "thief" at once. Ahmad Khan in reply dared Shuja'-ud-daula to do his worst; he had not sent for Umrao Gir, who had come of his own accord; and never yet had he turned out any refugee. Shuja'-ud-daula brooded over this answer, and for some months nothing more was heard of the matter. Meanwhile Nawab Ahmad Khan's chief men urged Umrao Gir to go away, for if anything happened, all the world would say that he had been the ruin of the Bangash family. Umrao Gir listened to them and prepared to go away. Ahmad Khan declared that not a hundred Shuja'-ud-daulas should drag him away did he wish to remain; at the same time, if he desired to go, his feet were not chained. Umrao Gir started in the direction of Agra, but had gone no more than one stage when he was recalled, Shuja'-ud-daula's approach having been reported to the Nawab.

Shuja'-ud-daula had heard that at Farrukhabad there was only a small force of four or five thousand men, the remainder being scattered about in the parganahs. He therefore gave out that he was marching on a mulk-giri, or expedition to recover revenue from refractory zamindars. Part of the army advanced up the Duab, plundering on its way the town of Muse-nagar on the Jumna. Head quarters were for a time at the Sarai of Khwaja Pul.* On his side, Shuja'-ud-daula left Faizabad and proceeded leisurely through his own dominions till he reached the ferry of Nainamau in parganah Bilhor. The army crossed over and proceeded to Kanauj, while Shuja'-ud-daula and the Emperor took up their quarters at a bungalow and bagh in Makanpur, called the Madar-bari, belonging to Ahmad Khan. The villages in the neighbourhood of both Kanauj and Makanpur were given up to plunder.

The news writers had kept Nawab Ahmad Khan under the impression that this army had set out for "Mulk-giri." It was not till Shuja'-ud-daula arrived at Makanpur and began to ask how long it took to reach Farrukhabad, that its destination was disclosed. Raja Gangab Singh of Chachendi,† a great friend of Nawab Ahmad Khan, then with Shuja'-ud-daula, determined to send a letter of warning. He disguised his messenger as a fakir and hid the note in the man's shoe. His orders were to deliver it to the Nawáb, in whatever place or in whatever condition he might find him. The messenger started off secretly, and it was past midnight when, reaching the gateway of Ahmad Khán's house, he reported himself to Musharraf Khán, darogha of the gateway. At the time the Nawáb, having eaten his dinner, had gone to bed. No one dared to wake him. At length Miyan Sáhib Ján 'Ali Khán went in, and pressing the Nawáb's feet, delivered the note to him. One hundred rupees were given to the messenger.

* In Parganah Sikandarah, some fourteen miles south-west of Jhinjhal railway station.

The Bakhshis were sent for in hot haste. They reported that very few troops were at hand. The Nawáb told them to send for all the clerks, and ordered parwánahs to be written to all the 'Amils and Faujdárs, calling on them to start at once for Fárrukhábád. At that time Bakhshí Fakhr-ud-daula with a large force was fighting Datta, zamindár of Aksauli, west of Márahra. The village lies in Parganah Sikandrah Ráó of the Aligárh district, and in those days the jungle was so dense that falcons (basirá) are said to have been caught there, and for years together no human being passed through it. In a few days after receiving the parwánah, the Bakhshi reached Fárrukhábád with this army. Help was also called for from Mau, Shamsábád, Aţa'ipur, Tilhar, Sháhjáhánpur, Barelá, Budáun, Anwáláh, Bisoli and Anjáháni.*

At this time Háfiz Rahmat Khán was encamped near his own frontier in Parganah Míhrábád, now in the Sháhjáhánpur district. The Nawáb sent to him Bakhshí Fakhr-ud-daula to ask his aid to save the Afgháns from disgrace. Háfiz Rahmat Khán, being no doubt afraid that, if Ahmad Khán were crushed, his own interests in the Duáb, where he then held Etáwah, Shikohábád and Phaphond, would be seriously endangered, seems to have shown great readiness to espouse the Nawáb's cause. He said he had already heard of the affair, and that account had encamped near his frontier; he was quite ready to join, but his troops were in want of pay. If money were advanced, he would send for Sa’dullah Khán, Donde Khán, Mullá Sardár Khán, Fath Khán and others. Even if money were not forthcoming, he would not fail to attend with his own men. After he had made a report of this interview, the Bakhshí was sent back with two lakhs of rupees to be made over to Háfiz Rahmat Khán for expenses, and a promise of further advances when Nawáb Sa’dullah Khán joined. On receipt of this money Háfiz Rahmat Khán wrote to Sa’dullah Khán and the other chiefs, calling on them to march without a moment's delay. He also wrote to Shekh Kalúr, his deputy at Etáwah, instructing him to march with his whole force direct to the Káli-naddi and encamp below Khudáganj. The Bakhshí returned and reported what had been done.

* Bisoli lies 24 miles N. W. of Budaon and Anjáháni 8 miles S. W. of the same place.
After this the Nawáb wrote a letter (kharita) to Gházi-ud-dín Khán 'Imád-ul-Mulk, Wazir, who was then in the country of Súraj Mall Jaṭ,* asking for his aid and presence. The despatch was made over to Khwája Khán, the wakil of 'Imád-ul-Mulk, to whom the Nawáb said that if, which God forbid, he came across Súraj Mall, and he should ask why he, too, was not invited, the answer should be given, that formerly he had not behaved like a neighbour, else he never would have joined Safdar Jang. He had better march to join Shuja'-ud-daula, Safdar Jang's son, for with God's favour he, Ahmad Khán, did not want his aid; and, please God, he would serve Shuja'-ud-daula as he had served Safdar Jang.

When Khwája Khán reached Díg and delivered his letter, 'Imád-ul-Mulk at once sent for Súraj Mall. 'Imád-ul-Mulk repeated to him how affairs stood and declared it to be his intention to march to the assistance of Ahmad Khán. The Rájah asked why he had not been invited to join. Khwája Khán then repeated the Nawáb's exact words. The Rájah admitted that what the Nawáb said was true, still bye-gones should be bye-gones. Although he had not been asked, he would send off 3000 active horsemen with orders to encamp at Koil. If Shuja'-ud-daula advanced any further than Kanauj, they would advance by forced marches to join Ahmad Khán. Besides this he would send several thousand horse to accompany the Ex-wazír. They marched, and when 'Imád-ul-Mulk drew near the city, Ahmad Khán came out in person to meet him, and conducted him to his tents in the Haiyat Bágh.

In answer to the parvainahs the troops from far and near began to pour into the city. Altogether some thirty or forty thousand men had assembled, including Paṭháns from Shahjáhánpur, Sháhábád and other places. When Háfíz Rahmat Khán arrived from Bareli, his tents were pitched in the fort of Fathgarh. Below Zu'lfikárgárh, near the city, a bridge of boats was thrown across, and there Mullá Sardar Khán and Donde Khán crossed with their men. The artillery was got out and put in order. It was then sent on to the banks of the Bagár just beyond Yákútganj, where all the tents were set up which had been plundered from Safdar Jang and Naval Ráe. The Nawáb then marched out at the head of his army, and having stayed one night, he returned to the fort, leaving the Bakhshí in command. Roshan Khán and Umráo Gir, each with about five thousand men, were ordered to proceed and join Shekh Kabír's camp on the Káli below Khudáganj.

Soon after Shuja'-ud-daula's arrival at Makanpur, an eunuch of his establishment made his appearance at Farrukhábád, and put up at the Lál

* It was not till 1763-4 that Súraj Mall lost his life during a skirmish with Najíb Khán's troops.
Sarāe. He came to demand a return of the territory recently absorbed by Ahmad Khán. The Nawáb, having collected four or five thousand of his troops and all the Delhi refugees, such as Násir Khán, Ex-Subahdar of Kábul and others, sent for the eunuch. The envoy delivered a farrán from the Emperor, which was made over to Mihrban Khán, by whom it was read aloud. The Nawáb sent back an angry message to Shuja’-ud-daula. The next envoy sent was Sálár Jang, the Wazir’s brother-in-law. The Rohelas were supposed to be secretly favourable to Shuja’-ud-daula; but instead of listening to Sálár Jang’s message, they detained him as their prisoner.

’Imád-ul-Mulk now urged an advance towards the enemy, but Ahmad Khán objected to make the first advance. The Emperor being with Shuja’-ud-daula, people would call him a rebel and untrue to his salt, if he attacked first. He therefore proposed to write a remonstrance to the Emperor; they would see what answer they got, and they could act accordingly. The letter stated that the Nawáb, a hereditary servant of the state, was pursued by the unjust enmity of Shuja’-ud-daula. He ought to be called on to prove his accusations of using a Gulaábári, making elephants fight, and riding in a palki without leave. If mad elephants break their chains and rush off into the jungle to fight, no one is to blame. As to the royal pavilion, that is a mistake, only a few pieces of wood had been put up; for the Patháns having no manners, it was necessary to range them in rows along this barrier, and there force them to make their morning bow. The palki had been presented by his late Majesty, Alamgir II, when he made Ahmad Khán Bakhshi of the realm. Shuja’ud-daula was also angry, because Ahmad Sháh Durráni had deputed Ahmad Khán with Jahán Khán to bring that noble to his presence. Shuja’-ud-daula came with reluctance, and nourished an ill-feeling against the persons who forced him to attend. Najíb Khán, too, who was once in Ahmad Khán’s employ, now had risen so high as to claim equality, which being denied him, caused hidden enmity in his mind. The letter then went on to recount at length the intrigues before the battle of Panipat, intended to exclude Ahmad Khán from the good favour of the Durráni ruler. It concluded by an appeal to His Majesty’s sense of justice and requested that His Majesty would withdraw to some height, while the rivals fought out the matter. The victor could then present himself to do homage to his sovereign.

Mahtáb Khán Bangash, who was very clever and had not his equal for a negotiation, received charge of the above petition. One hundred men were told off as his escort. The Nawáb’s last instructions were that, if waiting two or three days would produce an answer, he should wait; if not, he was to come away without any formal dismissal. Mahtáb Khán on reacing his destination was admitted to an audience. The secretaries read out the petition in a loud voice word by word. After hearing it the Emperor dismissed Mahtáb Khán and sent for Shuja'-ud-daula. In the Wazír's opinion no answer should be sent; no answer was the best answer. Mahtáb Khán waited two days, and when he found out that no answer would be given, he left without permission and returned to Farrukhábád, where he made a report to the Nawáb.

Next day Ahmad Khán and 'Imád-ul-Mulk had a consultation.
'Imád-ul-Mulk urged the Nawáb to march without any further delay.
Just at this time, word came that Najib Khán had arrived at Nabiganj, a small town between Bewar and Chibramau, some eighteen miles south of Farrukhábád. Najib Khán Yusufzai, who had from various causes been detained at Delhi, had come by forced marches down the Duab víá Sakít, destroying crops and burning villages as he advanced. He was a turban-brother (paggri-badal-bháí) of Shuja'-ud-daula's. Ahmad Khán sent two hundred and fifty trays of food by one hundred and twenty-five kuhars, in charge of Sháh Muhammad Khán Jamadáír, and Gulsher Khán "sonthiwáli." These men had orders to deliver an ironical message that the food was for Najib Khán's own use, while the territory was there for his army's consumption; what he had done was quite right and lawful, for between brothers there need be no ceremony. Najib Khán in anger ordered them to remove the trays, they might read the Fátiha of his father over them.
It is said that six thousand Pathán horsemen left Najib Khán's service at Nabiganj. They were received with open arms by Ahmad Khán, dresses of honour were distributed and daily rations were served out to them.

Next day Najib Khán marched, and encamped near the Káli-nádi at Khudáganj, about half a kos from the camp of Shekh Kabír, Rájah Umráo Gir Atít, and Roshan Khán. Najib Khán sent word to Shekh Kabír that he wished to pay him a visit. Shekh Kabír replied that they could only meet sword in hand; having come to aid Shuja'-ud-daula, how could he think of asking for an interview with them. The next day, without paying his visit, Najib Khán marched off and entered Kanauj.

Najib Khán was conducted by Shuja'-ud-daula to the Emperor's presence. They then began to discuss their plans. Najib Khán assured the Wazír of his regret for the delay, which had allowed Ahmad Khán time to assemble troops. If war were decided on, he would be the first in the field, yet he doubted if his Afgháns would fight heartily against the Rohélas.
He proposed to negotiate. After two or three days Najib Khán put his troops in motion towards Farrukhábád. Hearing this, Shekh Kabír sent him a message not to come further, as next day it was his intention to provide him with some entertainment. Najib Khán sent back word that he had not come to fight, he had come to seek an interview with Háfiz Rahmat Khán. Shekh Kabír told him in that case he might pass, but without his troops.

Najib Khán, leaving his army, advanced with a few men, and crossing the Káli-nadi pitched his tents. Next morning he continued his march. As he got near the camp of Fakhr-ud-daula, he found the Bakhshi on his elephant, at the head of his whole army drawn up in battle array. Najib Khán passed them in review and saw that they were very numerous. There were more leaders on elephants with Fakhr-ud-daula than there were with Najib Khán. Najib Khán proffered a salam, but no one returned it.

Passing on, Najib Khán crossed the Ganges by the bridge of boats and waited upon Sa’dullah Khán, Háfiz Rahmat Khán, Donde Khán, Mullá Sardár Khán, and Fath Khán. Donde Khán, his father-in-law, taunted him for siding with Shuja’-ud-daula against a Pathán, but he defended himself by pleading gratitude for the timely aid afforded him, when invested by the Mahrattas in Sukartál. The night was passed in consultation. It appears that the Rohelas were offered one-third of the Bangash territory if they would withdraw, but Háfiz Rahmat Khán refused to forsake his friend Ahmad Khán.* The final decision was that peace should be made between Shuja’-ud-daula and Ahmad Khán. Háfiz Rahmat Khán engaged to go in the morning to see Ahmad Khán. When he was introduced to the Nawáb’s presence, he congratulated him on the good news. The Nawáb asked what he meant. Háfiz Rahmat Khán replied, that by God’s favour, they had gained a victory without fighting; Shuja’-ud-daula, becoming frightened by the preparations, had sent Najib Khán to make overtures to Sa’dullah Khán. Ahmad Khán said he himself would accept what they agreed to, but Gházi-ud-dín Khán ‘Imád-ul-Mulk must be consulted. They went together to that noble’s quarters. He was of opinion that Shuja’-ud-daula and Najib Khán, in despair of success, had made these proposals; although thus forced to make peace, they would not fail, when opportunity offered, to break their word. Háfiz Rahmat Khán admitted this was quite true, still when affairs took that turn, punishment would await them then as now. In the traditions of the Prophet was it not written that Peace is blessed. ‘Imád-ul-Mulk answered, that if they were of that opinion, his decision must follow theirs. Peace was thus decided on.

Háfiz Rahmat Khán reported to Najib Khán what had been said and done. The Emperor’s presence was their only reason for accepting peace, and he requested that Najib Khán would urge the Wazír to quit the Pathán territory at once. Najib Khán proposed that they should go together and persuade Shuja’-ud-daula to retire. Háfiz Rahmat Khán objected that he was in the service of Ahmad Khán, without whose leave he could not go. Najib Khán told him that he should not have accepted such a lowly position. Háfiz Rahmat Khán informed him that there were others, for Sa’dullah Khán and his whole army had been subsidized, their expenses had been paid from the Nawáb’s treasury, to that date seven lakhs of rupees had been advanced. He promised to go next day and ask the Nawáb for permission. The next day, Ahmad Khán having made no objection, Háfiz Rahmat Khán and Najib Khán commenced their march. When they reached Khudáganj, Shekh Kabír was asked to accompany them. They paid their respects to the Emperor, and then went to Shuja’-ud-daula. They told him he ought to return to the east again. At length the Emperor and Shuja’-ud-daula set out eastwards. When they arrived at Korah, Najib Khán and Háfiz Rahmat Khán took their leave. Najib Khán followed the route to Delhi, while Háfiz Rahmat Khán returned to his own camp. Next morning, Nawáb Sa’dullah Khán and the other Rohelas came to take leave of Naváb Ahmad Khán. He distributed gifts and dismissed them. The Sháhjáhánpur leaders also, ’Abd-ullah Khán and others, were given leave to go, after gifts and dresses of honour had been conferred on them.

* Life of Háfiz Rahmat Khán, p. 78.

Shuja’-ud-daula takes refuge at Farrukhábád.

After his defeat at Baksar on the 23rd October, 1764, Shuja’-ud-daula first sought aid from the Rohelas at Bareli, and for safety removed his women and jewels to that place. As the Rohelas declined to enlist on his side against the English, the Wazír and Háfiz Rahmat Khán came to Ahmad Khán at Farrukhábád. Not succeeding in inducing any of the Patháns to join him, Shuja’-ud-daula marched eastwards, only to be again defeated in May, 1765, at Korah-Jahánábád. Having again fled to Farrukhábád, he was persuaded by Ahmad Khán and Háfiz Rahmat Khán to come to terms, the result being the treaty signed at Allahábád in August, 1765.* A long speech by Ahmad Khán, dissuading from hostility to the English, will be found set forth in the “Siyar-ul-Mutadcharin.”†

A few anecdotes connected with Shuja’-ud-daula’s visit have been handed down. The encampment was at Háiyát Dágh, and then at Fath-gárh. One day the Patháns suggested that the Iráni (Shuja’-ud-daula) should be murdered, since his father, Safdar Jang, had murdered five of the Nawáb’s brothers. The Nawáb is said to have replied that treachery was not the habit of his family; by God’s grace, he killed his enemies, if at all, in the open field.

* Aitchison’s Treaties, Vol. II, p. 76.
An interview was arranged, and Mír Akbar 'Ali, teacher of Nawáb Sa'dat 'Ali Khán, told the author of the "Laub," that he went in the retinue of Nawáb Shuja'-ud-daula, being then twenty years of age. Ahmad Khán sent for arms from his armoury, which were much praised. Then trays of jewels were sent for. A pearl necklace, once worn by Kháim Jang, was much admired. Ahmad Khán put it round the Wazir's neck, when Shuja'-ud-daula became yellow with anger. He took the necklace off and for a long time held it in his hand and turned each pearl round with his fingers. Then putting it down on the cushion, he stood up and said, he wished to take his leave. The Nawáb and 'Imád-ul-Mulk stood up, and Shuja'-ud-daula then went off to Fathgârh. There he told his courtiers that Ahmad Khán had gone the length (zayádati) of investing him with the "khila't" of a pearl necklace.

Next day, Ahmad Khán returned the visit, and the two nobles sat down together, Dáim Khán, chela, being in Ahmad Khán's lap. Shuja'-ud-daula sent for water to drink, when Dáim Khán said "I too will drink." In those days it was the duty of Miyan Almá Khwája Saráé* to bring water for drinking. He took up a jewelled water bottle (suráhi) and cup, and the Wazir ordered him to give first a drink to the young Nawáb. Then Shuja'-ud-daula himself drank. From that day Almá 'Ali Khán had a great respect for Dáim Khán and obtained for him from Asaf-ud-daula (1775—1798) the jagîr of Pukhráyán, in pargañah Shaíhpur-Akbarpur of the Cawnpur district.

Muzaffar Jang's marriage.

When the Nawáb determined to find a bride for his son, Muzaffar Jang, he sent for and consulted Kábila Khánúm, one of the women of Ghazanfar Jang's time. He asked her who among his brethren had daughters, and where he should betroth his son, Muzaffar Jang. Kábila Khánúm replied that Murtazza Khán† had three daughters, and Khudábândah Khán‡ had also three daughters. The Nawáb replied that Murtazza Khán was a troublesome fellow; should he object it would cause ill-feeling. Khudábândah Khán was, however, a mild-tempered, quiet man; and he requested her to go to his house and propose a marriage of his daughter with the Nawáb's son, Muzaffar Jang. The woman went off to the house,

* The celebrated Almá 'Ali Khán, 'Amîl of the Duâb districts from 1774 till the cession in 1801. Lord Valentia who saw him at Lakhnau on the 23rd March, 1803, describes him as "a venerable old-woman-like being, upwards of eighty, full six feet high, and stout in proportion." (Travels, i. p. 136).
† Fourth son of Muhammad Khán.
‡ Twelfth son of Muhammad Khán.
and after some indifferent conversation, mentioned her errand. The Nawáb made no reply. After a moment’s pause, the woman said, “O Khudában“dah Khán! why do you not answer and accept at once?” Nawáb Khudá-bandah Khán said, that Núr-un-níssá had been already adopted by the holy man, Asad 'Alí Sháh,* so that he was helpless. It rested with that saint to agree or not, and if he agreed there would be no objection. The Khánum replied, that the Nawáb must go and tell the Sayyád, when there was no doubt he would consent. Khudábandah Khán said he would go that evening. When he went, the Sayyád asked what he wished, but he said it was for the Sayyád to decide. The Sayyád thought that to accept was desirable, to make any objection would do harm, he should therefore consent gladly. The Nawáb returned and told the woman Kábila that he agreed to the proposal.

On receiving her report, Nawáb Ahmad Khán proceeded to the Bibi Sáhibá, the widow of Muhammad Khán, whom he told of what he intended to do, and he asked her, should she approve, to go the next day to Khudá-bandah Khán’s house to carry out the custom of charáwáh.† She expressed her consent, and the next day went with great pomp to Khudábandah Khán’s house and carried out the usual ceremonies. Next day the ladies from the other side came with the naushka and carried out the usual ceremonies.

After this Nawáb Ahmad Khán sent for Nawáb Khudábandah Khán.
The Nawáb received him with especial kindness and embraced him. A friendly conversation began. Then Bakhshi Fakhir-ud-daula was sent for, and ordered to make out a grant of the town of Sakráwah (or Sakráya)‡ in the name of his beloved brother Khudábandah Khán. The secretary was to write it out at once, and, after obtaining the signatures of all the clerks in the office, it was to be brought to the presence. When the grant was brought, the Nawáb presented it to Khudábandah Khán and said it was in addition to all his former júgírs. Khudábandah Khán then took his leave.

Preparations began for the wedding. The Bakhshi and Mihrbán Khán were ordered to send food of every description to all the Muhammadans, from the first day till the day of the wedding. To the Hindus sweetmeats and almond confection were sent. The khansámán and Námdár Khán were directed to pitch tents within the fort for the Delhi nobles, so that each

* A Sayyád, son of Sháh-ud-dín Husán Bakhári; he came to Farrukhabád in Muhammad Khán’s time (1713-1743); he fought on Káim Khán’s side and was wound-ced. He died on the 7th Safár 1184 H. (2nd June, 1770).
† Presents to the bride at betrothal.—Qánuun-e-Islám, p. 62.
‡ A parganá in Tahsil Tirwáh in the south-east of the district.
might have his separate assembly. Dancing girls from far and near were gathered together, so that dancing might go on at all the different tents at once. At night all the nobles were invited, and each was conducted to a separate tent. To each were told off two chelas to attend on them and carry out their wishes. Nawáb Ahmad Kháń sat in his own hall, with some of the greater nobles, such as Násír Kháń, ex-Subahdar of Kábul, Nawáb Sháh Jiu, son of Kamr-ud-dín Kháń Wazír, Nawáb 'Itkáíd-ud-daula, son of the Emperor Ahmad Sháh's maternal aunt, and Nawáb Manav-var Kháń, brother of Roshán-ud-daula. The night passed in amusements in looking on at dancing and buffoons' performances, or in listening to singing. These festivities went on for a month.

For illuminating the city, bamboo screens were put up along both sides of the road, from the gate of the fort to the gate of Khudábándah Kháń's house. They adorned these screens with shades of mica and of coloured glass (kanwal) and with glass shades. Platforms adorned with brocade, cloth of gold and satin were prepared to carry the dancing women. This work was made over to Hájí Sarfaráz Kháń and Námdár Kháń the elder.
The fireworks were under Násír Kháń. Shafi Kháń, darogha of the elephant stables, was ordered to prepare handahs and bangla (covered howdahs) and amára (howdahs high at the sides) adorned with gold and silver. The elephants were to be in attendance at the gate of the fort. Bakhshi Fakhrud-daula and Díván Mihrbán Kháń were told that when the bridegroom mounted his elephant (megdambar) the nobles of Delhi were to be escorted to their elephants. The commanders of regiments and the jama'dars attended in their best raiment, accompanied by their relations.

When the procession was formed, the illuminations were lit in one blaze from the fort gate to Khudábándah Kháń's. They were formed of mica-shades (kanwal) and round globes (kwinkwina) placed on the left and right of the roadway. In front there were lustres with five or six branches each, making a total of fifty or sixty thousand lights. Then followed the thrones on which the dancing girls performed. Thus, with splendour and display, the bridegroom's party advanced step by step. Fireworks were let off at intervals. From both sides gold and silver flowers were flung on the bridegroom for good luck. At length they reached the bride's door. The Nawáb and the bridegroom and the nobles entered, while the other leaders attended outside. Dancing and singing then began, and the whole night was thus passed. At day-break the bridegroom was taken into the women's apartments for the ceremonies usual there. Then coming out the bride was put into a chanjol (a sort of sedan chair), which was covered with cloth of gold. All that Khudábándah Kháń possessed in the way of goods and chattels, he sent with his daughter as her marriage present. Then the return was made to the fort in the order in which they had come. At the fort all the nobles, chiefmen and bankers attended to congratulate the Nawáb, and made their offerings. Next day, rich gifts were bestowed on the dancers, the buffoons and the story-tellers. Suits of clothes were sent to every noble, to the Nawáb's brothers and brothers' sons, to the chiefs of the Bangash tribe and to the employés of the State.

Maharatta affairs: 1752—1771.

We have already described the rather complicated arrangement made at the peace of 1752. Safdar Jang then owed thirty lakhs, or as some say, eighty lakhs of rupees to the Mahrattas, as their pay for the time they had been in his service. This debt was transferred to the shoulders of Ahmad Khán, and as security the Mahrattas were to obtain sixteen and a half out of the thirty-three maháls then forming the territory of Farrukhábád. The Mahrattas, as usual, were the sole gainers, while Safdar Jang had no more than the empty gratification of having humbled his enemy.

At one time the Farrukhábad state is said to have consisted of forty-four maháls, but of these it is impossible to identify twenty-one, the names of which have not been handed down. Of the remaining thirty-three, sixteen and a half were assigned to Mulhár Ráo by a grant on copper, while a corresponding deed on copper for the other sixteen and a half maháls was made over to Ahmad Khán by the Mahratta. The grant was in the name of Mahmíd Khán, the Nawáb's son, and it stated that so long as a slave of the Bangash family was in existence, no Mahratta should interfere with those maháls.

The thirty-three maháls were as follows:

1. Shamsábad.—In the Farrukhábad district; it is now divided into
   S. West in Tahsil Káimganj, S. East and Muhamdábád in the Sadr Tahsil.
   In the Nawáb's time it included Tappa 'Azimnagar now in the Eta district.
   (Káli Ráe, p. 101.)

2. Birwar.—The old name of Bewar in the Mainpuri district, Gaz.
   IV. 657.

3. Bhongám.—Also called Bhonganw, in the Mainpuri district. It then included the present parganahs of Mainpuri and Kishni-Nabiganj, Gaz. IV. 670.

4. Kampil.—Now Kampil-Káimganj in Tahsil Káimganj, Farrukhábád district.

5. Pašíáli.—Eta district, Gaz. IV. 174.

7. Sókíth.—Now Eta-Sókíth, Eta district, Gaz. IV. 187.

IV. 158. In 1738 the Sayyad proprietors (who got the parganah in jagir from Farrukhsiyar in 1713) farmed 117 villages and the Nilgarán patti of the town to the Nawáb of Farrukhábád, and the other 60 villages with the Bhairon patti to Safdar Jang. The Nawáb Wazir took the first-named portion, known as Kismat avval, for himself in 1772, Gaz. IV. 162.

9. Soron-Badamiya.—Eta district, Gaz. IV. 125, 213.

10. Asut.—Across the Ganges in the Badáun district.

11. Nidhpur.—(Also called Miyão) Eta district, Gaz. IV. 205.

12. Borá-Sonhár.—Eta district, Gaz. IV. 711.

13. Sidhpura.—Eta district, Gaz. IV. 179.

17. Amritpur.—Across the Ganges in Tahsil Aligárh, Farrukhábád district.

18. Chibrámaw.—Tahsil Chibrámaw, Farrukhábád district.

19. Sikandarpur.—Now absorbed in Chibrámaw (No. 19,) Farrukhábád district.

20. Saurikh.—In Tahsil Tirwa, Farrukhábád district.

21. Sakráwah.—Tahsil Tirwa, Farrukhábád district.

22. Sakatpur.—Tahsil Tirwa, Farrukhábád district.

23. Auraiyá Phapond.—In the Etawah district, Gaz. IV. 408.

24. Sauj.—In parganah Karhal, Mainpuri district, 24 miles from Mainpuri. The old parganah was dismembered in 1840, 25 villages going to parganah Mainpuri and 17 to Karhal. Gaz. IV. 752.

26. Bhajpur.—In the Sadr Tahsil of the Farrukhábád district. It included parganah Pahára.

27. Tálgrám.—In the Chibrámaw Tahsil of the Farrukhábád district. In those days it included the Ta'luka of Thattya-Tirwa (Káli Báré, p. 145.)

28. Kannauj.—In Tahsil Kannauj of the Farrukhábád district.

29. Bilhor.—In the Cawnpur district, the next parganah east of Kannauj.

30. Sháhpur-Akbarpur.—In the western part of the Cawnpur district.
32. ShiIrójpur.—In the Cawnpur district, the parganah next to the east of Bilhor, No. 30.

33. Musenagar-Bhogni.—In the south of the Cawnpur district, along the left bank of the river Jamna.

We are not told which of these thirty-three mahals formed the sixteen made over to the Mahrattas. The management would appear to have been left in the hands of Ahmad Khán, though it is doubtful whether this refers to all the mahals, or only to the Nawáb’s half. We are told that, after deducting the costs of management and the pay of the troops, the balance was payable to Mulhár Ráo. On the part of the Mahrattas two bankers were appointed, called by them Bampoo, who were stationed one at Kanauj, the other at ‘Aliganj in Parganah ‘Azimnagar. The balance payable to the Mahrattas was made over to these two bankers, by whom the money was remitted to Mulhár Ráo. Receipts for each year were then forwarded to the Nawáb. These payments were made for several years in succession. They ceased after the battle of Panipat, fought in January 1761, when the Mahrattas left Hindustan for a time, retired beyond the Jamna, and proceeded to the Dakhin.

For some years the Mahrattas were occupied in domestic struggles and in warfare south of the Narbada. Advantage was taken of their withdrawal from Hindustan to recover all the parganahs which had fallen into their hands. During 1761-1763 Shujá’-ud-daula cleared the lower Duáb of their posts and even advanced into Bandelkhand as far as Jhánsi. Nawáb Ahmad Khán, in the same way, took possession of many of the parganahs once held by his father, and no longer paid any tribute to the Mahrattas. Etawah, Phapond and Shikohábbád, however, which had in 1761 been granted to Háfiz Rahmat Khán by the Abdáli monarch, were permanently severed from the Farrukhábád state.

Except for a short time at Delhi in 1764, and at the battle of Korah in 1765, no Mahratta was seen in Northern India for more than eight years. In the end of 1769, however, the Peshwa’s army, amounting to fifty thousand men, crossed the Chambal. It was under the command of Visáji Kishn, Ram Chandar Ganesh, Mahádaji Sendhiá and Tukáji Holkar. First they levied arrears of tribute from the Ját princes. Next, after a victorious engagement fought close to Bhartpur, they obtained sixty-five lakhs of rupees from the Ját princes. Overtures were then made to them by Najíb Khán, and it was agreed that their combined armies should march against Farrukhábád.*

Early in the year 1184 H. (27th April, 1770—16th April, 1771), Najíb Khán advanced from Delhi. Háfiz Rahmat Khán, whose son’s jágir of

* Grant Duff, pp. 349, 350.
Itáwah was threatened, marched to Khádir-Chauk on the Ganges. Here he learned that Najíb Kháñ, having been taken ill at Koil, had set out for Najíbábád. On his road he died at Hápar in the Meerut district. His death occurred in the month of October, 1770. His eldest son, Zábíta Kháñ, proceeded with the Mahrattas towards Farrukhábád.

 Háfíz Rahmat Kháñ sent fifteen thousand horse and foot to the aid of Ahmad Kháñ. On hearing that the Mahrattas were at Pájíáli, some forty miles west of Farrukhábád, Háfíz Rahmat Kháñ marched in person to Fathgárh and encamped on the east bank of the Ganges. A consultation was then held with Ahmad Kháñ. A bridge of boats was constructed, and the remainder of the army, about twenty thousand horse and foot, crossed the Ganges and encamped between Fathgárh and Farrukhábád.

Meanwhile Zábíta Kháñ wrote to say that he was a prisoner in the hands of the Mahrattas. Negotiations began for his release and the withdrawal of the Mahrattas. The Mahrattas claimed Itáwah and Shikohábád, which had been long in their possession before they were handed over in jágir to Háfíz Rahmat Kháñ. During this period Najíb Kháñ’s army arrived from Ghausgárh* and Najíbábád.† Zábíta Kháñ succeeded in escaping during the night and, joining his troops, returned home.

The war was now carried on by the Mahrattas alone. In several actions they defeated the Afgháns, who behaved badly. At length the Rohelas were on the point of re-crossing the Ganges, when the Mahrattas broke up their camp and marched for Itáwah. 'Ináyat Kháñ, son of Háfíz Rahmat Kháñ, was then asked by his father to give up his jágir of Itáwah. He refused and retired in disgust to Bareli. Donde Kháñ, however, relinquished his claim on Shikohábád. Orders were sent to Shekh Kabír to resign the fort of Itáwah to the Mahrattas. Shekh Kabír, who had in the interval repulsed the Mahrattas several times, obtained honorable terms. He then joined Háfíz Rahmat Kháñ at Farrukhábád, and all the Rohelas returned to Bareli after an absence of eight months (October, 1770—May, 1771).‡

At this time Sendhíá entered the Nawáb’s territory and encamped at Nabíganj, some twenty miles south of Farrukhábád. Bakhshí Fakhr-ud-daula proposed to collect forty thousand men and attempt resistance. The Nawáb, who was old and blind, said he knew they would fight to the last man, but the Bakhshí was the blind man’s staff, and if the staff (which God forbid) were broken, the blind man would be destroyed. He therefore desired that a peace should be made as quickly as possible. The Bakhshí taking with

* Between the towns of Thána Bhowan and Jalálábád in the west of the Mu-zaífanagar district. A mosque and a large well are all that is left to mark the site.
† In the Bijnor district.
‡ Life of Háfíz Rahmat Khan, pp. 89—93.
him Gházi-ud-dín Khán 'Imád-ul-Mulk, visited the Mahrattas and asked what terms they would accept. Sendhiá claimed the sixteen and a half maháls given by the former treaty. He wished to collect the revenue himself, for while the Nawáb had the management, years had elapsed without any payment having been made. As there was no help for it, the sixteen and a half maháls were given up. Ahmad Khán directed that although the territory had been reduced to one half its former extent, no troops should be discharged. In three years his eyes would be all right, and then he would take his revenge. The income being reduced, while the same expenditure was maintained, the coin collected in the treasury was soon spent.

Ahmad Khán's blindness and death.

For a year or two before his death, Nawáb Ahmad Khán was afflicted with inflammation of the eyes, and he gradually lost his sight. One Basant Ráé Kuhhál (operator on the eye) treated him for the malady, but without success.

His eyes had begun by paining him, and after a time his sight became weak. One or two years passed in this condition, but day by day the sight became worse. He concealed the fact as well as he could. He used to come to his ordinary place and return every one's salutation. The courtiers, from actions opposed to his usual habit, noticed his blindness but said nothing. At length the defect could no longer be concealed. Several of the Nawáb's servants recommended Hakim Núr Khán Muhammad Sháhí, as well spoken of for his treatment of diseases of the eye. They were told to bring him, and he treated the Nawáb for one or two months without effect.

One day it came into the Nawáb's mind that by feasting religious mendicants, his vows might be granted. He therefore ordered Bakhshí Fakhr-ud-daula and Mihrbán Khán to put up tents inside the fort. Food of every sort was prepared and given to fúkirs and the poor. They offered up their prayers for his recovery. For forty days the food was given away. The pious Hisám-ud-dín adduces many instances of the efficacy of prayer by holy men; but he admits that in this instance the prayers were not heard, for, as he says, the supplicants were not saints.

Shortly after this a clever scoundrel came from the Panjáb, and was introduced to the Nawáb through Rahmat Khan, son of Jahan Khan. He promised to remove the obstruction. The cheat, putting a little water in the palm of his hand, said some words over it, and then applied it to the Nawáb's eyes. For several days this process was repeated. Then under pretence of requiring money to offer in alms, he got silver and gold and went away, promising to return in a day or two. He was never seen again.
Another cheat was Sayyad Bâkir. He wrote a forged letter in the name of a holy man of Lakhnau to Jân 'Ali Khán, saying he had heard that Nawáb Ahmad Khán had lost his eyesight and had given up all hope except in the intercession of fâkirs. Now in the city of Farrukhábád would be found a fâkir of great holiness, chief of the age, whose name was Sayyad Bâkir. There was little doubt that he would be able to restore the Nawáb's eyes. Jân 'Ali Khán went with the letter to the Nawáb. The Nawáb told him to obey its directions. Bakhshí Fakhr-ud-daula and Jân 'Ali Khán proceeded to that deceiver and with the profoundest respect brought him to the Nawáb. The Nawáb presented him with five hundred rupees and a number of rich dresses. The fâkir said food must be distributed daily, while he underwent a forty days' fast, for which a secluded place must be provided. The Nawáb ordered Jân 'Ali Khán to find the man a place in his garden. Then that lying philosopher promised the Nawáb that sight would return to his eyes on the festival of the 'Id-ul-âdhr. Jân 'Ali Khán took the fâkir to his garden and placed men to watch him. As the promised time drew near, one night in the end of Ramzán, the cheat got over the back wall of the garden and escaped. On the day fixed Jân 'Ali Khán was sent to bring the fâkir. He went into the garden and called, but there was no answer. Then he looked about and could find the man no where. Wringing his hands, he came out of the garden and sat down at his own entrance gate. For very shame he was unable to appear before the Nawáb. At length the Nawáb sent to know what had happened. Jân 'Ali Khán was forced to go and reported how they had been deceived. The Nawáb after this ceased to repine and put his full trust in God, whose will is best.

Nawáb Ahmad Khán breathed his last on the 28th Rabi I, 1185 H. (12th July, 1771), the day on which 'Ali Guhar Sháh 'Alam reached Khudáganj, on his way from Allahábád to Delhi. After a delay occasioned by the disturbance raised by Murtazza Khán, the body was taken out and buried in the Bihisht Bâgh, in the tomb prepared by Ahmad Khán in his own lifetime.

The date of his death is given by the following chronogram—

\[\text{Kunand giriya khudãik ba-nalãh o Afghãn.}\]
\[\text{Malãik áh kashãnd az wafát Ahmad Khán, (1191—6 = 1185).}\]

Another is—"Hai, Hai, Hâtim Tâe sâni na mând," (1155).

The Emperor with his escort of some five thousand men marched on the next day, accompanied by Shuja'-ud-daula and others,† and encamped

* Miftâh-ut T., p. 526.
† The 'Thrat-nâmah states that Shuja'-ud-daula, after visiting the Emperor at Allahabad, returned to Faizabad. The text gives the local tradition.
at the village of Saraiya in parganah Pahāra, outside the south-west corner of the city. Bakhshī Fakhr-ud-daula placed Muzaffar Jang, the Nawāb's son, on an elephant and took him to present his nazar to the Emperor. The title of Farzand Bahādūr (afterwards cut out on the young Nawāb's seal) was conferred at this interview. There being no money in the treasury, the Bakhshī melted down all the silver of the howdahs and other furniture and sold it for three lakhs of rupees. This sum with seven elephants and eleven horses was presented to the Emperor.* One lakh of rupees was obtained by Najaf Khān for arranging a settlement. After a halt of twenty-two days, Shāh 'Alam marched to Nabīganj, where he waited nearly three months, till the arrival from Delhi of Mahājī Sendhia.

Anecdotes showing Ahmad Khān's habits and character.

His full titles, as found on a cannon cast in 1173 H. (August, 1759—August, 1760), which was still in existence in 1839, were as follows:—Bakhshī-ul-Mamālik, Amīr-ul-Umrā, Ghazanfar-ud-daula, Muhammad Ahmad Khān, Bahādūr, Ghazanfar Jang, Sardār-ul-Mulk, Zafar-i-iktidār, Sher-i-Hind, Bahādūr, Ghālib Jang. To these may be added the title of Kayām-ud-daula which was, according to the Tūrikh-i-Muzaffari, conferred in 1175 H.

He seems to have had little natural energy or ambition; he was emphatically one of those who, instead of achieving greatness, have greatness thrust upon them. In the course of our story we have seen repeatedly how his timidity or ill-timed scruples prevented him from pushing home a first success. After the battle of Rām Chatauni such was the state of consternation and want of preparation in the capital, that Ahmad Khān, had he not been turned off by fair words, could easily have made himself master of the Emperor's person. He could then have played the part afterwards so successfully assumed, one after the other, by Ghāzi-ud-dīn Khān, Najīb Khān, Najaf Khān and the Mahrattas. Again, when Islām Khān, chela, was 'Amīl of Kāsaganj, he made a successful raid into the upper Duāb, and it is highly probable that, had he been strongly supported, he might have carried out his boast of making his master the actual master of Delhi and its sovereign.

Stories are told of him in which it is hard to distinguish whether his conduct was due to mere good nature or foolish simplicity. For instance, we are told that the Nawāb had an extreme affection for new money. It was his habit to have the rupees spread out in the sun to prevent them getting black. Seated on a low stool, he watched them himself. Whenever he called for water or betel leaf or his huqqa, the chelas would go in with wax on their feet. In this way, in the course of five or six hours, they would carry away some hundreds of rupees. When the money was counted and put back, some of the bags would remain unfilled. Then the Nawab would be surprised and say to his chelas, ‘‘I do not know how it is, but I watched these rupees myself, and yet they have diminished. Perhaps they ‘‘have been exposed too long to the sun and have got too much dried up. ‘‘Go and place the bags in the treasury.’’*

It was the Nawab’s habit to go out twice a day, sometimes on an elephant and sometimes in a palankin. At other times, quitting the city, he looked on at elephant-fighting. As he passed through the streets of the city, he was attended by men carrying bags of money for the distribution of largesse. Their orders were to allow the approach of the humble poor, the weak, the blind, the lame and the sick. To all these money was given; not one poor man was passed over. Especial proteges of his were the so-called Khopiwalads.† Some hundreds of families lived along the road side from the fort to the Mau gate, and below the fort as far as the edge of the Kadam Sharif pond. They were people of all castes, who had followed the Nawab’s camp from Delhi in a year of famine, he having distributed five thousand rupees a day in food during his stay there. They acquired their name from the rough earthen huts which they built to live in, not having funds to build houses in the usual way. The Nawab would often send money and food to them, saying, that they must not starve, since they had left their homes to follow him.

The Nawab’s retinue was accompanied by numerous Salyyah-bardars (?) spearmen, (barchi-bardars) lancemen, (bhala-dars) macemen, (chobdars) heralds, (nakibs) flatterers, (bad-faroosh) bards, and (karkah-go) singers. The Nawab’s titles were announced and his praises cried out as the procession moved on. It was preceded, at a little distance, by a number of men with bambu sticks, lacquered in various colours, gold, scarlet, and so forth, some plain and some with flowered patterns. For about two cubits of their length these bambus were split. If any one came in the way of the retinue, whether rich or poor, he was beaten with those bambu sticks. They were also used to anybody who incurred the Nawab’s anger. The sound made by the blows was so great, that it could be heard a quarter of a kos off, though no wound was caused; any one who was beaten considered that his lucky star was in the ascendant, for the Nawab was sure to send for him. Then he would say ‘‘You have not been hurt;’’ and the man would reply ‘‘Nawab Sáhib, each bone in my body aches as if it had been broken.’’

* This story is in the main confirmed by Shekh Allahyar, author of the Hadikat-ul-Akdtin, who was at Farrukhabad in 1769-70, in the employ of the Nawab.
† Apparantly from khop = a cave or cavern.
Then he would receive a present in cash and goods, to the amount that his fate had willed for him.

The Nawáb is said to have had a peculiar affection for the tune (rág) known as Bihág. On his birthday the singing women and male dancers (bhakta) were assembled from every part of the territory. About nine o'clock in the evening, the Nawáb used to come to the Díván-khána, with all his most costly jewels on, seated in his fringed palki “Fath-naásíb.” (Fated to Victory.) This palki got its name from being the one used by the Nawáb during the battle, in which he totally defeated 'Abd-ul-Mansúr Khán, Safdar Jang. At the side of the palki walked all the leading Patháns and the Nawáb’s cousins and nephews. There was a general illumination and discharge of fireworks. At this time no other kind of singing was allowed except the Bihág.

The Nawáb’s taste was for highly decorated buildings, and where he slept, he had the walls adorned with pictures of himself and his friends. During his time he built six palaces. 1st, The Khás Mahal, where in 1839 Bibi Achihpal (widow of Muzaffar Jang) lived, and its doors, said to be copied from those of Harbong’s foot at Jhúsi, still showed the decorated work. 2nd, The Mubárik Mahal. 3rd, The Salábát Mahal. It was situated at the back of the Motí masjid. Originally the doors and ceilings were gilt, but before 1839 the colour had been scraped off and taken away to extract the gold from it. 4th, The Hall of Audience in the Mubárík Mahal, occupied in 1839 by Wiláyati Begam, widow of Nawáb Násír Jang (1796—1813). 5th, The Kamání gate of the fort. A stone, removed from this gateway in 1858-9, is preserved at the Sadr Tahsíl; it is in shape like a milestone, and bears the following inscriptions in raised letters:

I. Zahi báb dawlat bar qfráshtand Bíná-ash chú kutb-i-falak sákhthand
Barú nír razed ‘z charkh bárán Chú bárán-i-rahmít bárúé-zamin
Matín muñkám o ustwár ámdah Chú uyfád faláki kárár ámdah
Máh o sál án hátíf dil-nawáz Bagyfsta “Dar-i-fuíz didam báz.”

(1172)

II. Nawáb ín dravázhá rá támír chú furrúdáh ast Yák hazár yak sad haftád igná býdah ast.

6th, Some buildings and repairs to a fort at Mau Rashídábad, which has now entirely disappeared.

The Nawáb also paid attention to repairing the fort, restoring the city wall and renewing the Haiyát Bágh, where Muhammad Khán, his father, and Kaim Khán, his brother, were interred. In the open space between the fort wall and the gate of the Díván Khána he put up a Gulál-bár (a royal pavilion).* There the leaders and commanders and lieutenants came and,

* See Blochmann’s “Ain i Akbari,” Vol. I, plate X for a representation of one.
standing, made their obeisance, after which the Nawáb acknowledged their presence and took his seat.

The Bihisht Bâgh, just south of the Mau Sarâe, within the city wall, was planted by Ahmad Khán. The mosque is perhaps the largest and most elegant in the city, and at one side of it there are the remains of a handsone hot air bath. The Mohalla just to the south, chiefly occupied by Kâchis, is called Ahmadganj Khândia. Besides the mosque, there are nine large domed tombs within the enclosure, that of Ahmad Khán, the largest of all, standing nearly in the centre, opposite the gateway. The persons buried there are as follows: Makbarah No. 1.—Ahmad Khán; Dîl-Daler Khán; the Banârsî Nawáb, his son; Zahûr 'Ali Khán, son of the Banârsî Nawáb; Imdâd Husain Khán, son of Dîl-Daler Khán. In the verandahs—Himmat 'Ali Khán, son of Dîl-Daler Khán. Three tombs of infant daughters of Ahmad Khán; Nawáb Himmat Bahádur, grandson of Ahmad Khán; Nawáb Chôté Khán, son of Nawáb Káim Jang. Makbarah No. 2.—Nawáb Mahmûd Khán, eldest son of Ahmad Khán; a child; and his Begam. Makbarah No. 3.—The Bibi Sâhiba, widow of Nawáb Muhammad Khán Ghazanfar Jang, and two other Begams. In the verandahs—Sitâra Begam, daughter of Ahmad Khán; Fírûz Jang’s mother, wife of Nawáb Buláki; Bibi Achhpal, wife of Muzaffar Jang; five Begams, names unknown. Makbarah No. 4.—Kábila Khánun. Makbarah No. 5.—A mistress of Shaukat Jang (1813—1823). Makbarah No. 6.—Two graves, names unknown. Makbarah No. 7.—Râni Sâhiba, wife of Ahmad Khán brought by him from the east. Makbarah No. 8.—Tålí Khán and Roshan Khán, chelas of Ahmad Khán. Makbarah No. 9.—Bakhshi Fakhr-ud-daula, assassinated in 1772-1773.

We are told in the Lauh-i Târîkh that the revenue demand of the thirty-three mahals was eighty lakhs of rupees, exclusive of jâgîrs, assignments for pay, revenue-free grants, and so forth. Hisâm-ud-dîn tells us that the Nawáb’s income was sixty lakhs of rupees. The expenditure was as follows: Three lakhs a month were required for the soldiers’ pay and the household servants of every fort. One lakh went to the expenses of the three wives, to the purchase of jewels, and the feeding of fâkîrs. One lakh was spent on the elephants, horses, camels, and artillery establishment. There were five hundred guns, large and small, always ready; and the manufacture of powder and ball went on without intermission. There was in this way an expenditure of at least five lakhs a month; if there were ever any surplus, it was paid into the Treasury.

In the later years of Ahmad Khán’s life, Bakhshi Fakhr-ud-daula had become the leading man in the State. He had the charge of the whole territory, and he is praised for the vigour with which he repressed the turbulent. Sometimes Miyan Sâhib Roshan Khan was sent eastwards to restore order. This office of Miyan Sâhib, or familiar companion of the Nawáb, was held by a number of persons in succession. The first was Sa'datmand Khan. He was a boy, named Madan Singh, whom Roshan Khan captured on one of his expeditions, when he destroyed the village of Sabzpur (?). When Ahmad Khan saw the lad, he took a fancy to him, made him a Muhammadan and gave him the name of Sa'datmand Khan. A year afterwards he raised him to high rank and gave him the title of Amîr-zádah, telling Bakhshi Fakhr-ud-daula that every act done by Amîr-zádah Sa'datmand Khan was to be considered as final, no one was to interfere. His father, Mandal'Singh, was made ruler of Kanauj.

The other Miyan Sâhibs were: (1) Sa'dat Khan Afridi, (2) Sayyad Nûr 'Ali Khan, (3) Mir Jân 'Ali Khan, (4) Roshan Khan. Sa'dat Khan was the brother of Mahmûd Khan, Bakhshi to Nawáb Káim Jang. He was appointed during the campaign in the hills (1751-2). One day the Nawáb had seen him in the bazár of Sayyad Nûr 'Ali Khan and sent for him. Once the Nawáb was reading a book, while Sa'dat Khan was seated behind him to the right, engaged in keeping the flies away. Sa'dat Khan in a disrespectful way brushed with the chowuri the head of Nûr 'Ali, who was seated next him. The Nawáb saw this and said to him, "The Omnipotent is Lord over all,—"

"Ba-chashm-i-hakârat ma-bîn ba-sîc kas
"Kih û mantâkam hast, o fâryâd-ras."

Now, it was Sa'dat Khan's habit to go every fifth or sixth day to spend the night at his own house in Amethi, returning to his post in the morning. A short time after the above incident, Sa'dat Khan asked for leave to go home. During the night, the Nawáb conferred on Nûr 'Ali Khan double the dignity and wealth that Sa'dat Khan possessed. At the appointed time Sa'dat Khan appeared, and what should he see, but Sayyad Nûr 'Ali adorned with jewels and seated on the edge of the masnad, at the right hand of the Nawáb. He fell into great consternation. On his approaching, the Nawáb spoke to him—"Look, Sa'dat Khan, at the work of the Causer of "all things, remember yesterday's words,—"

Chunân hast ãn khâlik be-nazîr,
Ba-yak lahza sâzad gaddâ-râ amîr.
Makun ba sûc kas az hakârat nigâh ;
Kunad az takabbâr shâhân rá fâkîr.

"Such are the ways of the Creator without equal, in a moment He "makes a beggar into a noble, and turns a king into a beggar." Hearing this reproof, Sa'dat 'Ali Khán was much abashed and hung down his head. A few days afterwards, he was appointed to the command of a regiment of two thousand horse.

Núr 'Ali Khán succeeded as Miyan Sáhib, and he received gifts and honours above all the other courtiers. He in turn was displaced by Mír Ján 'Ali, and he was then transferred to the maháls of Derapur-Mangalpur (now in the Cawnpur district). Ján 'Ali’s father had been adopted by Mír Fath-ullah. When the Nawáb saw Ján 'Ali, he took a fancy to him and kept him at his court. His title was Miyan Sáhib Ján 'Ali Khán. He built the masjid on the left, as you turn out of the main bazar to drive up to the Tehsil in the fort. In the course of time, the Nawáb transferred his favour to Muhammad Roshan, a resident of Kanauj, and he becoming Miyan Sáhib was enriched with gifts like his predecessors. He was styled Miyan Sáhib Roshan Khán Bahádur.

Ahmad Khán’s wives.

There were four wives:
1. Dulhín Begam—The daughter of Sanjar Khán, Paṭhán, zamindar of Rudán, parganah Kampil.
2. Rání Sáhiba—She was brought by the Nawáb from the east at the time of the siege of Allahábád.

There were besides many concubines. In the above list it is difficult to identify the daughter of Sher Zamán Khán Dilázák of Jaunpur, who was, according to the Balwantnúnah (year 1164 H.), one of the wives of Ahmad Khán. In that work there is a Karm Zamán Khán named as a nephew of Sher Zamán Khán, so possibly the Karn Khán of the Farrukhábád books was the Begam’s cousin instead of her brother. In that case the Jaunpur wife would be Fakhr-un-Nissa, No. 3 of the list.

Ahmad Khán’s children.

He had three sons and one daughter:
1. Mahmúd Khán—He died in his father’s lifetime and was buried in the Bihisht Bágh. Mahmúdganj in the town of Chibrámáu was founded by him (Kílí Ráe, p. 134). He left one son, Himmat Bahadur, who married 'Umdah Begam, daughter of Muzaffar Jang, and died in 1240 H. (August, 1824—August, 1825), leaving one daughter, Riyázat-un-Nissa, who was twice married, first to Imád Husain Khán, son of Dildaler Khán; secondly to Himmat 'Ali Khán, a younger brother of her first husband.
2. Daler Himmat Khan—Muzaffar Jang, who succeeded his father. He will be dealt with separately.

3. Dil Daler Khan—He retired to Benares about 1786, and the tradition is that he committed suicide there in January, 1799, at the time of Wazir 'Ali Khan's rising. The story will be told in Part II. From the Agency records it appears, however, that he died on the 19th Sha'bán 1214 H. (18th January 1800), fully a year after Wazir 'Ali's insurrection. He left four sons and three daughters, whose names with their alliances and descendants will be seen from the genealogical table appended to this Part.

4. Sitára Begam—She married Muhammad Zamán Khan, son of Murtazza Khan Bārsiri, i. e., the big-headed, fourth son of Nawáb Muhammad Khán. When she died, she was buried in the Kásim Bágh, beside her aunt, Roshan Jahán, eldest daughter of Nawáb Muhammad Khán. She was supposed to share with her aunt the power of driving away evil spirits. Others point out her tomb in the Bihisht Bágh (see p. 157).

Ahmad Khan's Chelas.

According to the custom of the family, Nawáb Ahmad Khán made about three or four hundred Hindu boys into chelas. Those who had charge of his territory acquired much wealth; the rest who received only pay and gifts rose to no eminence. They were all known as Ghálib Bachha.

1. Zu'lfikár Khan—In Ahmad Khan's time there were three men known as nawabs, at whose houses the "nawbat" was played: 1st, Ahmad Khan himself, called the Bare nawáb; 2nd, Zu'lfikár Khan, called the Majhle nawáb; 3rd, Dáim Khán called the Chhoṭe nawáb. Zu'lfikár Khán's titles were "Sharf-ud-daula Zu'lfikár Khán Bahádór Shamsheer Jang." His seal bore the inscription—

An kih dar bázíq-pákash kuwvat khair dar est
Az 'atáé Ahmadí khúsh Zu'lfikár Haidar est.

He was Názim of parganah Shamsábád and had his head-quarters at 'Aliganj, Tappa 'Azimnagar, (now in the Eta district). Up to 1839 a fine building, a bágh, and women's apartments existed there. He repaired all the dilapidations in the town wall and in the fort built there by Yákút Khán.

2. Dáim Khan—Islám Khán, chela of Shamsheer Khán, chela of Nawáb Muhammad Khán, had two sons (1) Roshan Khán and (2) Dáim Khán. The elder brother, Roshan Khán, was one of the courtiers of Nawáb Ahmad Khán. When Dáim Khán was six or seven years old, one day Roshan Khán took him in his palkí to the Nawáb's audience. The Nawáb asked whose child he was. Roshan Khán replied, that he was his younger brother. The Nawáb then asked his name, and he was told it was Dáim. Ahmad Khán said he would adopt him and gave him the titles of 'Azim Jang Muhammad Dáim Khán Bahádur, but he was popularly known as the Chhoté Nawáb. When he grew up he was married with great display to Muni Bibi, the daughter of Bakhshi Fakhir-ud-daula.

In his childhood the Emperor Ahmad Sháh had held him in his lap, fed him and with his own hand put on his shoulders miniature kettle-drums (nakkaráh and dauktár), thus conferring upon him the "naubat."

In 1839 buildings still existed in the city, which had been built by this chela. (1.) There was a masonry bridge (known still as "Pul-pukhta"), in the middle of the city, which had stood then the heavy traffic of seventy or eighty years. There were also (2) a masonry well with steps at the Mau gate, which is still in existence, although out of repair, and (3) a mansion within the fort, to the north of the Imámábára; it was afterwards occupied by Ahmad Yár Khán Náib (died 9th December, 1839); and in 1839 was known by the name of Himmat Bahádur's house. (4) Dáim Khán's Mahal-Saráé was at one side of the fort, in the low land, surrounded by the houses of poor people; and near it was a private enclosed garden (Khána bágh). His descendants dismantled the buildings, sold the materials, and having consumed the proceeds, handed over the land to cultivators. (5) He also planted the bágh near the Mau gate called the Chahár Bágh, afterwards in the possession of the Nawáb Rais, and (6) he planted a bágh and made a masonry well with four runs near the Madár Darwáza, traces of which existed in 1839. (7.) There is a Dáimaganj adjoining the town of Chibrámau, which he established and named it after himself.

So long as the parganah belonged to the Farrukhábád Nawáb, Dáim Khán was the nominal manager of Parganah Sháhpur-Ákbarpur (now in the Cawnpur district). The jágir of Pukhráyán in that parganah was continued to him by Míyán Almás 'Ali Khán, the Audh 'Amil, and it remained with the family till it was sold by auction in 1845, in execution of a decree of the Civil court.

Dáim Khán himself paid no attention to business, he left all such work to kárindás who embezzled the money. Nawáb Dáim Khán would then be forced to pay out of his pocket, or would beg Ahmad Khán to remit the amount. His whole time was spent in taking his ease, in hunting with falcons or bajri (a kind of hawk), in shooting tigers, in chita hunting, in wrestling or gymnastics, in listening to singing or looking on at dancing. Nawáb Ahmad Khán had given him lakhs of rupees or goods, by way of present, but he squandered it all in his pleasures. By Muni Bibi he had three sons: (1) Daler 'Ali Khán, entitled Fath Jang, (2) Rustam 'Ali Khán, (3) Ahmad 'Ali Khán. Daler 'Ali Khán had a son, Madár Khán, who turned fakir and took the name of Mahndi Sháh. Rustam 'Ali Khán had no children. Ahmad 'Ali Khán had only one daughter, and she married a Pathán of some village near Koil. From Dáím Khán was derived much of the information recorded by Bahádúr 'Ali, joint author of the Lauh-i-Tárikh, his grandfather Sayyad Ghulám Hussain (who died 1226 H. January, 1811—January, 1812), having been for forty years in Dáím Khán's service, and lived at the gateway of his house in Farrukhábád.

3. Bakhru-ud-daula—He was a chela of Muhammad Khán's time (see p. 346, Vol. XLVII.). He was Ahmad Khán's first Bakhshi, and played a prominent part in the later years of that Nawáb's life, and in the first year of Muzaffar Jang's reign. He was assassinated in 1772-3 and is buried in the Bibisht Bágh.

4. Rahmat Khán—He was the son of Jahán Khán, chela of Muhammad Khán. He became second Bakhshi. He was fond of men of learning and passed his time in fasting and prayer. He was noted for his generosity and bravery.

5. Haji Sarfaráz Khán—He was the third Bakhshi. He had the peculiarity of prefacing every sentence he spoke with the words “B'ism-illah.”

7. Míhrbán Khán—He held the post of Diwán. He was the son of a Rájah whose father, during the Allahábád campaign, presented him to the Nawáb. He was a poet, had written a Diwán and was very eloquent; Wali-ullah gives us a specimen of his poetry. The celebrated poets, Mirzá Raúf Sauda and Mír Soz, were for a long time in his employ.

8. Islán Khán—At one time he held the office of third Bakhshi. He had a house close to the Buland Mahal in the fort (which in 1839 was occupied by Nawáb Tajammul Husain Khán, Zafar Jang). Once Nawáb Ahmad Khán asked him how many sons he had. Islán Khán replied, that he had five, Amána, Karámata, Bakwa, Rahmaná, Barhná. The Nawáb, out of sympathy for his large family, appointed him Faujdár of Kásganj (now in the Eta district). Islán Khán started, taking as usual some of the Nawáb's foot soldiers and a couple of guns. When the money-dealers and landholders came to present their offerings to the new Faujdár, Islán Khán, addressing them in full durbar, said he had been sent to procure money, and within eight days the monied men must produce one lakh of rupees. He would give a bond making the money repayable with interest from the incoming revenue. They all began to make excuse. Then Islán Khán set up a triangle and had several money-lenders flogged. To save their honour, the rest joined together to provide the lakh of rupees. Islán Khán gave them a bond for the amount.
He then wrote to the Pathans of Mau, Kámganj and Shamsábád, calling for men to take service. Any one between twelve and sixty years of age might present himself, and the Amil’s message was, that if he refused to employ them, on him should be the curse; if they failed to come, on them let it be. In one month he had collected five thousand men. He then marched from Kámganj towards Márähra and began to plunder the villages of the Háthrás* and Mursán Rájahs,† both now in the Aligárh district. The people began to ask what sort of a Tahsildar this was who, instead of looking after his parganah, got together an army and went to war.

It was reported to Nawáb Ahmad Khán that Islám Khán, having levied a lakhs of rupees from the Kámganj money-lenders by threats of imprisonment, had started with an army, and had already plundered the Ját of Mursán. It was said that he had reached Firúzábád;‡ that he had surrounded it with his horsemen and had not retired till he had received twenty thousand rupees.

Nawáb Ahmad Khán sent a parwánah to Islám Khán by a camel rider’s hand, saying he had only intended to provide him with enough to live on, what was this that he had done? By entering another’s territory and plundering in all directions, he had caused disgrace to his master’s name. Islám Khán’s reply was, that the Nawáb had no reason to be dissatisfied, for in two months he would seat him on the throne of Delhi. His army had risen to close upon ten thousand men.

The Rájah of Háthrás wrote to complain of the invasion, and the Nawáb replied, that the slave had rebelled, and the Rájah should punish him. On receiving this reply, the Rájah of Háthrás called on the Rájah of Bhartpur, a Ját and related to him, for the aid of his troops. The Rájah of Bhartpur sent one thousand men to Háthrás. There were several encounters with Islám Khán’s troops, and numbers were killed on both sides. At length Islám Khán’s army was defeated, and all his money was used up. Then Islám Khán mounted his Irání mare, and rode in one day from near Mursán to Farrukhábád. On hearing that he had arrived, the Nawáb sent for him and enquired why he had behaved like a scoundrel in plundering the country. His answer was, that he had determined to take Delhi and seat the Nawáb upon the Imperial throne, but fate had not so willed it. The Nawáb was forced to smile, and after a long time he was restored to his post of Bakhshi. Meanwhile his army, on being left to itself, dispersed.

They say that this chela was by caste a Kalár (spirit-dealer). His five sons adopted the Shia heresy, and two of them were killed at the Farrukhabad Karbala during the Muharram ceremonies. They were named Ḥabash Khán and Ṭabīṣ Khán (Ṭabīṣ Nāšīr). Another son was killed in a private quarrel at the door of Rahmat Khán Sawārah-wālā. The fourth died a natural death. The fifth, Amán Khán, was alive when Bahādur 'Alī wrote in 1839.

‡ This cannot be the place of that name between Agra and Etawah, and I know of no other.

Islām Khán is said to have been in twelve fights, and he had received many wounds. Every day he drank spirits, but in Farrukhabad in Muẓaffar Jang's time that was thought no fault. If any friend asked him his sect he would say, "Besides Allah, I know nothing, and my creed is this 'La- illah-illa-allah, Ahmad Khán rasūl allah,' for has he not made me from "a Hindu into a Muhammadan." He was so attached to intoxicating liquor that on the day he died, some hour or two before his death, he had a bottle of spirits and a cup beside him. He went on demanding spirits from his sons and drinking. One son said "Khán Sāhib, your death is now "near, renounce wine, and God will forgive your sins." He said to him, "My son, why renounce it now, I never did so when I was well, bring me "the wine-cup and fill it to the brim." He drank and shortly after expired. As an instance of his freedom of spirit, they relate that he was once sent as Kotwāl to Mau, which he brought into thorough order. One day, however, a Pathān attacked him and cut him with a knife. Islām Khán came away at once and remarked to the Nawāb that his sons-in-law, i.e., the Pathāns, were coming to take possession of his city and fort.

9. Dilawar Khán—Called Chunti or the ant, from the extreme irascibility of his temper. I know not if this is the Dilawar 'Alī Khán mentioned by Kālī Rāe, (p. 108) who was 'Amil of 'Azimmagar. That man had been a Thakur, and was the son of Dhan Singh and the brother of Tāj Singh.

10. Sulaimān Khán—Darogha of camels.
11. Shuja'īd-dil Khán—Called Shuja'-ud-daula, who held the office of Khānsāmān.
12. Musharraf Khán—Mīr Tozak. He was a chela of Muhammad Khán's time.
15. Mubārik Khán.
17. Sūfī Khán—He was originally Gauhar Singh, Thākur of Daulatabad, Parganah Sakrawah (Kālī Rāe, p. 135). He held Majhūpur in that Parganah in jāgīr.
1879] W. Irvine—The Bangash Nawâbs of Farrukhâbâd. 165

18. Kaifi Khán.
21. Zaráfat Khán Umâzâdah—He established a village on the road from Farrukhâbâd to Kanauj, but in 1839 there was nothing left standing but a broken masonry gate.
22. Aftâb Khán.
23. Tâla'war Khán.
27. Pahâr Khán.
29. Bádal Khán.
30. Mangal Khán.
32. Muzaffur-âl Khán.
33. Manavwar Khán.
34. Kâle Khán—'Arz-begi.
35. Muhammad Yâr Khán—Dâipuri.

Besides these, there were scores of slaves employed in various ways, some carried gold sticks, and others coloured bambus. Some were provided with caps like those of the Kizil-bâsh or the Faringis. A large number were occupied with the charge of the war material. Others were personal servants, such as abdârs, attendants at the bath-room, keepers of rosaries, attendants to help in the ablutions for prayers, for driving away flies, for preparing and offering pân, or for carrying shoes. To guard the private apartments, where the Nawâb slept, was the duty of a trusty servant, Shâh Beg Khán Bangash. The guards of the inner and the outer doorway were Shamsâher Khán, Gulsher Khán, chela, and Bakhtâwar Khán, chela. The command of the fort was held by Mîr Muhammad Fazl 'Ali.
Chronological Table of the reigning Nawabs of Farrukhabad, 1713—1857, A. D.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Number</th>
<th>Name, with father's name</th>
<th>Mother's name</th>
<th>Date of Birth</th>
<th>Date of Accession</th>
<th>Date of Death</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>Imam Khan, son of No. 1.</td>
<td>Not known.</td>
<td>Born at Mhamdabad, date unknown.</td>
<td>16th Zil Hajj, 1161. 27th Nov. 1748.</td>
<td>1163, date unknown. Nov. 1749, Nov. 1750.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
MAD KHAN,
12th July, 1771.
Genealogical Table of Sa'dat Khan Burhan-ul-Mulk's family.

Sayyad Muhammad of Naishapur,
(50 to 60 miles west of Mashad.)

Mírzá Násir.

Mírzá Yusuf.

Name unknown. (See 'Amád-us-Sa'dat p. 29, line 9 from end.)

Mírzá Muhammad Múkin
Sa'dat Khán
Burhan-ul-Mulk.

Daughter, m. to Ja'far Beg Khan.

Shah Mír (m. daughter of Mírzá Násir
and sister of Burhan-ul-Mulk
Sa'dat Khán.)

[By wife.]

By Kháním Sáhíba, a concubine.

Hingga Begám, m. to Nasir-ud-dín Haidar.

Mohamdi Begám, m. to Muhammad Kuli Khán, nephew of Safdar Jang.

Aminá Begám, m. to Sayyad Muhammad Khán.

Bandi Begám, m. to Sayádat Khán, son of Sayádat Khán, the elder.

Mírzá Muhammad Bákír, Sayádat Khán,
died 1144 H.
June 1731—June 1732.

Nísár Muhammad Khán
Sher Jang,
(Subahdar of Kashmir.)

By wife.

Daughter, m. to Safdar Jang.
Genealogical Table of Safdar Jang's family.

Yusuf Turkmán.
  | Shah Jahán.
  |  | Bidágh Sháh.
  |  |  | Hasan 'Ali Mirzá.
  |  |  |  | Mansúr Mirzá,
  |  |  |  | (who removed to Naishapur from Tabríz.)
  |  |  |  |  | Muhammad Kuli Beg.
  |  |  |  |  |  | Muhammad Shafl' Khán Beg.
  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  | Ja'far Khán Beg,
  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  | m. sister of
  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  | Burhán-ul-Mulk
  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  | Sa'dat Khán.
  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  | Mirzá
  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  | Muhsin 'Izzat-ud-daula,
  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  | m. sister of
  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  | Nawáb Najaf Khán,
  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  | died Rabi II, 1162 H.
  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  | (March—April, 1749.)
  |  |  |  |  | Mirzá
  |  |  |  |  | Muhammád Mu$hím
  |  |  |  |  | Sa$dár Jang,
  |  |  |  |  | m. daughter of
  |  |  |  |  | Sa'dat Khán,
  |  |  |  |  | Burhán-ul-Mulk.
  |  |  |  |  | died 1753.
  |  |  |  |  |  |  | Fátima Begam,
  |  |  |  |  |  |  | m. to
  |  |  |  |  |  |  | Mirzá Isma'il,
  |  |  |  |  |  |  | brother of
  |  |  |  |  |  |  | Najaf Khán.
  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  | Jalal-ud-din Haidar,
  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  | Shuja'-ud-daula,
  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  | died Jan. 1775.
  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  | Sa'dat 'Ali Khán.
  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  | died 1813.
  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  | Mirzá
  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  | Amáni
  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  | Asaf-ud-daula,
  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  | died 1798.
  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  |  | Wazfr 'Ali Khán.
The Sect of the Prān-nāthīs.—By F. S. Growse, Bengal Civil Service,
M. A. Oxon., C. I. E.

The small and obscure sect of the Prān-nāthīs is one of the few, of whose literature Prof. Wilson, in his Essays on the Religion of the Hind-dus, was unable to furnish a specimen. This I am now in a position to supply, having obtained while at Mathurā a copy of one of the poems of Prān-nāth himself, from the sole representative of the sect in that city.
It is very curious, both from the advanced liberalism of its theological ideas and also from the uncouthness of the language, in which the construction of the sentences is purely Hindi, while the vocabulary is mainly supplied from Persian and Arabic sources. The writer, a Kshatriya by caste, lived at the beginning of the 18th century and was under the special patronage of Chhatrasāl, the famous Rāja of Panna in Bundelkhand, who is commonly said by the Muhammadans to have been converted to Islām, though in reality he only went as far as Prān-nāth, who endeavoured to make a compromise between the two religions. His followers are sometimes called Dhāmīs, from Dhām, a name of the Supreme Spirit or Paramātma. Like the Sikhs and several of the later Hindu sects they are not idolaters, so far that they do not make or reverence any image of the divinity, but if they have any temple at all, the only object of religious veneration which it contains is a copy of the works of the founder. His treatises,—which, as usual, are all in verse—are fourteen in number, none of them of very great length, and bear the following titles: 1, The book of Rāsi; 2, of Prakāś; 3, of Shat-rit; 4, of Kalas; 5, of Sanandh; 6, of Kirantan; 7, of Khulāsā; 8, of Khel-bat; 9, of Prakrama Ilāhi Dulhan (an allegory in which the Church or 'Bride of God' is represented as a holy city); 10, of Sāgar Singār; 11, of Bare Singār; 12, of Sidhi Bhāsa; 13, of Márafat Sāgar; 14, of Kiyā-mat-nāma. The shortest is the last, of which I now proceed to give the text, followed by an attempt at a translation, which I am afraid is not altogether free from error, as I am not much versed in Koranic literature and may have misunderstood some of the allusions. The owner of the MS., Karak Dās by name, though professing so liberal a creed, was not a particularly enlightened follower of his master, for I found it impossible to convince him that the Isa of the Korān, so repeatedly mentioned by Prān-nāth, was really the same as the incarnate God worshipped by the English. Like most of the Bairāgis and Gosains with whom I have talked, his idea was that the fiery and impetuous foreign rulers of the country were Sūraj-bansis, or Descendants of the Sun, and that the sun was the only God they recognized, as was evidenced by their keeping the Sunday holy in his honour.

But without further preface to proceed to the text of the poem. It stands as follows:

|| श्रीद्वरिः ||

वास उमत सु कद्वियाँ जारः ।
उठों सेविने क्षामत चाहें ॥
कैदंतीज मापवः कुरानः ।
तुमारे चागे कलं वचानः ॥ १ ॥
जो कोा वास उमत सिरदारः ।
धड़े रक्षा है ज्ञापवारः ॥
बस्त्यवनामे दैवे सांगः ।
अगारै सदी हौसी चेवाकः ॥ २ ॥
वरकत दुनियाँ चोर कुरानः ।
चोर पकोरीकी मेहक्वानः ॥
ए दरगाहसे आरे वचानः ।
जावंराजल वैजासी मजावः ॥ ३ ॥
तिन दिन हौसी अंधा धुंधः ।
चार तोवाके हौसी वंधः ॥
कहाय हौसी चोर रेवेसः ।
तव केाउ निस्तोका नाही घेः ॥ ४ ॥
चत्व कही जीवाती का रच्छा ।
निसान क्षामताका जाहिर कहाय ॥
पांसाह इसा वरस चाचीसः ।
लिवा सिकारे बांठआसः ॥ ५ ॥
कां हिंदु कां दुःस्ववानः ।
सव रक्तादर क्याहे इसानः ॥
बा का हौसी उठे कुरानः ।
ये विचारे देशों चित्र चानः ॥ ६ ॥
नव के नवे झये वितितः ।
तव हजारत इसा चाहे दतः ॥
बा लिवायां गधारे सिकारे मानि हः ।
F. S. Growse—The Sect of the Prán-náthis.

1879.

रूढ़े इतमाल पेहेने जामे देखे ॥ ७ ॥
लिया छरे जें देखे ॥
ये लिया गले चिपारे माहे ॥
शोषिताला जाये देखे ताहे ॥ ८ ॥
इे जे वरसं इसानी काखी ।
तिनकी बस्तोर करदेंदं सही ॥
इस चम्गौरी वरेंके तीस ।
इसा पादसाह वरस चाङीस ॥ ६ ॥
सातर वरस चोर जो रहें ।
से ते पुलसरातने कहे ॥
भूमिन चले जिनबीकी नाखं ।
मुलाके भी घोड़ेकी भांत ॥ १० ॥
चोर जाहेरी उपन जो रहे ।
इस बिघ सिंकों देजनक कहे ॥
पुलसरात कही घड़ौंके थां ।
पि वजे कँठे नहीं पावं पार ॥ ११ ॥
आभूमतसलनं कहा ये ।
इे जाये देखी दिल दे ॥
इे जाहेर कहा बूढान ।
हिरे बंधे न सके पेहेनं ॥ १२ ॥
इस इसा चम्गौरी इसांग ।
बाहुसंदेह फाजर तमांग ॥
इे लिया बीच सिपारे बां ।
तीसमां सिपारकों नाम ॥ १३ ॥
इारे इसा महामत चोर इसांग ।
सवाको इारे करो सरांग ॥
पर ना देखी अंंदों जाहेरी ।
दिल हिरे देखी सिविल घटी ॥ १४ ॥
चुरानीले देखा बजूद ।
ते चादमकों नाखि सजूद ॥
बसेरे बीहे तिन बेचूद ।
से सारीहो ड़ेने रहे ॥ १५ ॥
जा उनने देखा आकार ।
तेलाफनी लानल ऋषिया युग्यार ॥
तव जः जःगौर जगयां वचन ॥
के चार्डाम नेवा ऋषिया दुर्समंग ॥ १६ ॥
उनकी चोलाकी मारों राख ।
स्वयं के दिशयर हंडं वातसाह ॥
चार्डाम चार्डाजीललु ऐयी भव ।
झोंगे सियारे गाहर कहौ ॥ १७ ॥
पर तुम यत वाड़ीकी बज़ल ।
पर कारं करें तुम जा वाड़ीकी नशल ॥
तुम दजाज वाहर पुछत ।
तहें दीलपर वेंता लें लानार ॥ १८ ॥
उपर मांने ना हेवे पेंड़चाँ ।
ऐ तुम घुनिया दिलके कान ॥
झसेसा भावतो है जुं ।
भव भी परे भायः हैं घूं ॥ १६ ॥
सव पेंगंवर जहदर बिखजे ।
वींच रेरों दीरे दिलके ॥
झोंता आया सिंधुको दरम्यांग ।
मिनकु तुम केहते कुदरांग ॥ २० ॥
तुम छूरो बपने सियारे मांहे ।
तभी तो साहिथ आयां नाही ॥
झिनके बेचेरी काँफर जान ।
ऐ सबकी करसी सिवात ॥ २१ ॥
रच ना रघु विसेशा गुमान ।
झोंता गृहविपर मेंहरवां ॥
परदा विख्या चंजरते दोरे पर ।
झिनकी कारं तुसको नाही घवर ॥ २२ ॥
परदा विख्या वाले सिंधुको मांहे ।
ऐं इससारत पावे नाही ॥
जें देमते हैं जेर जवर ।
ऐ सिंधुको तवे काँफर ॥ २३ ॥
ऐसी सिंधुको हित सिवात ।
The Sect of the Prin-nâthis.

1879.
F. S. Growse—The Sect of the Prin-nâthis. 175

वाघर चिंतुचारी सुलभपुवत।

चोर चाप भजरत रसालग पनाछ।

या तो जलज फकीरसे घातसाच।

रांगे सिपारे उन्हूं वयान।

न मानें ये जाने दें कुरान।

चोर चिंतुचारी किलावासे येँ कही।

वुधकर्णी कावे गढ़ी।

चारें करसी यंयरस।

मसर भाग दूसरी वस।

कोई कहेसी दाऊं का। दूसरी यंक वें।

तिनजा भी करें गवें।

या इसारं योले निज गुढ़।

बिना छादी न पादः युग।

घाड़ेंगा लिङ्गा कलकीकर।

ताजा किनजों नहीं धरत।

जातक कहें विजया यान्वें।

सव कलनजों करसी निबान।

बंजीर कहें इसा दुर्गक।

या चारें करसी चढ़।

जलज जल जल सुसा क़ड़ा होंगे।

तानों चाय कुटे सव कोंगे।

सारों ने रसम जुदी करलें।

सव वुजरकी धनीकी कही।

अंधे उरभे जुदे नाग धर।

सव झांमकी चाया चायर।

चपनी चपनी समभे सव।

जुदा न रहा चार जय।

सव किलानी दह्स साख।

जुदे नाम जुदी लिही मांच।

सव चसत दाऊ जुदे कोंग।

माया ब्रजुशा चीड़ा यंके दीये।

देवो जहांनमे थी उरभंज।

काउ सहियस चंसन।
The Sect of the Prân-nâthîs.

[No. 2]
Go tell the chosen people; Arise, ye faithful, the day of judgment is at hand. I speak according to the Kurán and make my declaration before you. All ye heads of the chosen people, stand up and attend. The Testament (Wasiyat-nama)* gives evidence: Eleven centuries shall be completed after the blessing of the world by the Kurán and by him who was merciful to the poor. A voice shall come from the tabernacle and Gabriel† shall take them to the appointed place. For three days there shall be gloom and confusion and the door of repentance shall be closed. And what shall there be any other way‡? Nay, no one shall be able to befriend his neighbour.§

Say now what shall be the duration of this life, and what the clear signs of the coming of the last day. Christ shall reign for forty years, as is written in the 28th sipāra. Hindus and Musalmáns shall both alike bring their creed to the same point. And what shall come about, when the Kurán has thus been taken away? this is a matter, which I would have you now attentively consider.

When 990 years are past, then the Lord Christ will come. This is written in the 11th sipāra: I will not quote a word wrongly.|| The Spirit of God (i.e., Christ) shall be clothed in vesture of two different kinds; so it is stated in the Kurán. This is in the 6th sipāra; whoever doubts me may see it there for himself. These now are the years of Christ, as I am going to state in detail. Take ten, eleven and twelve thirty times (that is

* Wasiyat-náma is, I believe, a general name including both the Kurán and the Hadís, which together make up the Muhammadan rule of faith; but I have not been able to trace the particular tradition, to which reference is here made as specifying the exact number of years that are to elapse before Christ’s second coming.

† Gabriel is accounted God’s ordinary messenger, but here I should rather have looked for Isráfiil, whose duty it will be to sound the trumpet at the last day.

‡ Reves may possibly stand for ravish.

§ Khes is for khwesh, a kinsman.

|| In spite of this emphatic assertion, the quotation would appear to be incorrect, for the 11th sipāra contains no such prophecy.
to say, \(10 + 11 + 12 \times 30 = 990\). Then Christ shall reign 40 years. The other 70 years that remain (after 990 + 40, to make up 1100) are for the bridge Sirât. The saints will cross it like a flash of lightning; the pious with the speed of a horse; but as for the merely nominal believers who remain, for them there are 10 kinds of hell;* the bridge Sirât is like the edge of a sword, they fall or they get cut in pieces, none cross over. This is stated in the \(\text{A'}\text{miyat-salán}\); go and look at it carefully. The statement is clear, but your heart is too blind to see it. Christ stands for 10,† the Imám for 11, and in the 12th century there shall be the perfect day-break. This is written in the \(\text{A'}\text{m sipára}\), which is the 30th.

When Christ, Muhammad and the Imám are come, every one will come and bow before them. But you should see not with the eyes of the body, but after reflection with the eyes of the soul. Azázil saw in person, but would not bow to Adam. Though he had done homage times without number, it all went for nothing. When they saw his pride,‡ the curse was pronounced and he became an outcast. Then Azázil asked a boon: "Adam has become my enemy. I will pervert the ways of his descendants and reign in the hearts of them all." Thus it was between Adam and Azázil, as is clearly stated in the 8th sipára. You take after him in sense, but what can you do, since you are his offspring. You look for Dajjál§ outside, but he sits at your heart, according to the curse.

You have not understood the meaning of the above: listen to me now with the ears of the spirit. In like manner as He has always come, so will he come again. All the Prophets have been of Jewish race—look through them with the eyes of the soul—that is, they have sprung from the midst of Hindus, whom you call Káśirs. Search now among your own people; the Lord has never been born among them. The races, whom you call heathen, will all be sanctified through him. The Lord thinks scorn of no man, but is compassionate to all who are humble. A veil is said to be over the Lord's face. What, do you not know this? By the veil is meant 'among Hindus'; mere reading does not convey the hidden intention; if you look only to the letter, how can you grasp the spirit? Thus is declared the glory of the Hindus, that the last of the Prophets shall be of them. And the Lord Christ, that great Prophet, was the King of the poor Jews. This is stated in the 5th sipára; if you do not believe me, go and examine the Kurán yourself. It is also stated in the Hindu books that Budh Kalanki will assuredly come. When he has come, he will make all alike; east and

* This is the Hindu computation; the Muhammadans reckon only seven hells.
† This is the Hindi computation; the Muhammadans reckon only seven hells.
‡ This is intended to explain the curious calculation given above, ten, eleven and twelve multiplied by thirty.
§ Dajjál, here the spirit of evil generally, is properly the name of Antichrist.
west will both be under him. Some one will say, ‘Will both be at once?’ This too I will clear up, explaining the intention to the best of my ability; without a guide you would not get at the truth. Kalanki, it is said, will be on a horse—this every one knows—and astrologers say that Vijayábhínand will make an end of the Kali Yug. Now the Gospel says that Christ is the head of all, and that He will come and do justice. The Jews say, that Moses is the greatest, and that all will be saved through him. All follow different customs and proclaim the greatness of their own master. Thus idly quarrelling they fix upon different names; but the end of all is the same, the Supreme God. Each understands only his own language, but there is no real difference at bottom. All the Scriptures bear witness that there are different names in different languages; but truth and untruth are the two incompatibles, and Maya and Brahm have to be distinguished from one another. In both worlds there was confusion; some walking by the law of Hindu, others by the law of Muhammedan ceremonial. But knowledge has revealed the truth and made clear both heaven and earth: as the sun has made manifest all creation and harmonized the whole world: so the power of God bears witness to God; he speaks and all obey. All who perform acts of religious worship, do them to the Lord; the word of the Most High has declared it so. It is written in the third sipára that he opened the gates of the highest heaven.

The Lailat-ul-Kadr (or night of power) has three contentions: on the third dawn the judgment will commence. The spirits and angels will appear in person, for it was on that night that they descended: the blessings of a thousand months descended also. The chiefs will be formed into two companies; God will give them his orders and through them there shall be salvation. This is abundantly attested by the Kurán; the statement is in the Iná-anzal-ná Chapter. After the third contention will be the dawn; in the eleventh century it will be seen.

And what is written in the first sipára? you must have seen that. They who accept the text kun are to be called true believers. Now if any one is a true believer, let him bear witness and prove the fact. Put off sloth; be vigilant; discard all pride of learning.‡ He who hears with

* For khídáya I propose to read khuláya; but even so, the meaning elicited is not very satisfactory.
‡ The allusions are to the chapter of the Kurán called the Súrat-ul-Kadr, which is as follows: “Verily we have caused the Kurán to descend on the night of power. And who shall teach thee what the night of power is? The night of power excelleth a thousand months; therein descend the angels and the spirit by permission of their Lord in every matter; and all is peace till the breaking of the morn.”
‡ The text kun is the parallel of the Mosaic phrase, “And God said ‘Let there be light,’ and there was light.”
perfect faith* will be the first to believe. Afterwards when the Lord has been revealed, all will believe. Heaven and hell will be disclosed, and none will be able to profit another. Lay your soul at your master's feet; this is what Chhattrasal tells you.

* Hakk-ul-YaMn, 'perfect faith,' is faith without seeing, which alone is meritorious; for all who see must perforce believe.
Rough Notes on the Distribution of the Afghan Tribes about Kandahar.*—
By Lieut. R. C. Temple, 1st Goorkhas, (with two maps).

I was employed in foraging in advance of General Stewart's Division during the march back from Kelát-i-Ghilzai to Kandahar, 1st to 10th February 1879,—afterwards in taking a convoy of camels to Col. Patterson's reconnoitring expedition down the Arghisán valley, 13th to 23rd February, and these rough notes are the result of such information as I had time to pick up regarding the population of the villages I passed en route. At the foot of the Maps accompanying these notes, I have given a list of the villages inhabited by the various tribes of Afghans found in those parts so that the reader can see for himself how they are distributed; but the following additional notes may prove useful.

Nearly all the Afghans living in the Kandahar district are Duránis of the Pópalzai and Bárakzai sections. Of these the Pópalzais mainly occupy the valley of the Tarnak as far as Shahr-i-Saffa and the Bárakzais the whole valley of the Arghisán to Máráf. Beyond Shahr-i-Saffa (now merely a ruined mound), as far as Jaldak in the Tarnak valley, the Alikózai section of the Duránis is found; the Ghilzais not being seen till the neighbourhood of Kelát-i-Ghilzai is reached.

* The local pronunciation of this word is as nearly as possible Kandhár, the second syllable which probably really exists between the d and the h being so short as to be scarcely audible. [It is commonly identified with the Sanskrit Gandhára (गंधार); Ed.]
As may be supposed, a large city like Kandahar has attracted Afghans of all kinds of tribes to itself, and in its neighbourhood is found one Kákar village, Malang, but it is a small one. The Mómands again have a large village which has lately changed its site, as the name, Koneh Mómand, of some neighbouring ruins testifies.

There is a large colony of Ghilzais* about 6 miles from Kandahar owning some eight villages about Taraki Kulácha† which is, as its name signifies, a hamlet of the Taraki section of the Ghilzais. Sayads are found scattered about in this as in other parts of Afghanistan. The hamlet of Sayad Mohammad Sháh is, or rather was, the residence of the late Wazír of the Amír in these parts. And lastly colonies of one section are found scattered here and there in the country of another. The villages of Tang (Pópalzai), Khaugání Káréz (Khúgiánis), Mákián (Mákus), in the midst of the Báarakzái villages of the Arghísán valley, are cases in point.

With these exceptions the population of both the Tarnák and Arghísán valleys respectively, as far as Kelát-i-Ghilzai and Márúf, are Duráni Pátháns of the Pópalzai, Alíkózai and Báarakzái sections. Near Kandahar villages of mixed populations are common, such as Deh-i-Khója, which I have set down as being Pópalzai, and Shahzádá which I have called Ghilzai, meaning of course that the bulk of the population is Pópalzai and Ghilzai respectively in each, but further up the valleys, mixed villages are not often met with.

Numerous subdivisions or septs of the main sections of Duránis are found in the above villages. Of the Pópalzais I was told the following lived about the Kandahar district:—

2. Bámézais.
5. Marsingzais.
7. Aiabzais.

Of the Alíkózais, the following:
2. Karazais.

Of the Báarakzáis, the following:
1. Mohammadzais.
2. Sulimánzais.

* This word is usually pronounced locally Ghilzai, but sometimes Aghalzai.
† Kala means village and Kulácha little village or hamlet.

Of Panjpao Duránis:
1. Alizais.
2. Núrzais.
5. Ságzais.

The above subdivisions are not all to be found in the official list of the subdivisions of the Afghan tribes, in which the Sadozai and Bámézai sections of the Pópalzais are the only ones given, while no subdivisions are given in it of the great Bárakzai section, and the three subdivisions above given of the Alikózai section differ in name from the three given in the official list. The acknowledged imperfection of the official list and the great number of subdivisions, into which every tribe or even section of a tribe of Afghans is split up, would easily account for my names varying from those found in it. I asked a great number of questions regarding these subdivisions, and as far as I know, the above information is correct.

One curious point turned up during my interrogations. Several of those I questioned would not acknowledge the Achakzais as Duránis, though of course there can be no doubt as to their being so, while they admitted the Kákozai and Achalzai subdivisions of the Achakzais into the Bárakzai section. I saw no Achakzais about Kandahar, though the Khójak Pass is held entirely by them.† The Ságzais found in the Arghisán valley are not mentioned in the official list of the Panjpao Duránis. But I was assured, they were Duránis and neither Pópalzais or Bárakzais, but of a lower descent, i.e., they were Panjpaos. If not a section of the Panjpao, they are probably a subdivision of one of the sections.‡

As regards the pronunciation of the names, the termination zai is sometimes pronounced almost as zoï (two syllables) especially in the Arghisán

* This name is pronounced Khangán in the Arghisán valley and their village called Khangání Káréz (the name Káréz, being given a village, does not now argue the existence of a Káréz in its neighbourhood, it is merely an affix), similarly the Mákus are called Mákiáns and their village Mákián. The term Panjpao is usually also pronounced Panjpaé about Kandahar.

† The Achakzais are said to have been originally part of the Bárakzais who were separated from them for political reasons. Mir Aslam Khán the Sirdár or chief of the Achakzais calls himself Abdal? Abdáli = old name for Durání.

‡ Durání are divided into Zírák Durání with 4 sections, Pópalzais, Alikózais, Bárakzais, Achakzais, and into Panjpao Durání with 5 sections, Núrzais, Alizais, Ishakzais, Khúgiánis, Mákus. The Zírák descent is considered by far the most honorable. valley. The name I have given as Pungi has a very peculiar pronunciation like Pungai, and a similar sound is heard in Lándé Káréz, as if it were Lándái Káréz. The sound Néjoi is also peculiar in the o which is softened almost to the German ö, as if it were Nejöi. Khél-i-Akhund is also called Khél-i-Akhwand. Deh-i-Náo is often called Náo-i-Deh or Navvi Deh (= new town). Beyond the extremely guttural sound of the Pushtu consonants, heard in these words, there is little to be noticed but the following. Saifu-l-lah is pronounced often as Zaipullah, Zanghir Khán as Tanghir Khán, Khunsézai as Khunchezai.*

There is considerable difficulty in discovering the name of a village† for the following reasons:—A village may be called by six different names by guides; those thoroughly acquainted with the locality would recognise it by any one, others less well acquainted will only know it by some of them. Thus a village may be called (1) after the district or tract of land in which it is situated. Takht-i-pul is such a name, Mel Manda is another; villages ten miles apart are all called Takht-i-pul or Mel Manda, simply because they are situated in the tracts so named. (2) It may be called after the section of the tribe which inhabits it, thus Báarakzai; (3) after the subdivision, thus Khunsezai or Muhammadzai; (4) after its late owner if recently dead; (5) after its present owner; thus Kala-i-Núr-uddin Khán merely means Núr-uddin Khán's village and the owner's is usually the proper name of a village; (6) after its own name. To give an example the village, marked Amín Kala on map No. 1, was named to me as Báarakzai, Muhammadzai, Amín Kala and Latíf Khán. Latíf Khán is its present owner, Amín Khán was the late owner, Muhammadzai is the subdivision and Báarakzai the section of the tribe inhabiting it. It will be easily seen that the more general of these terms are known at a distance, while the more specific ones only in the immediate neighbourhood of a village—and this is what one has to look out for in asking the way on the march, especially as a guide or passing villager thinks he has done quite enough, when he has given any one of the names by which a village may be designated. Complicated as this system of nomenclature looks, it is natural enough in a country where the individual occupies such an important part in men's minds, and nationality so little. It is not difficult to deal with in practice, after a slight knowledge of the country is acquired, but it accounts for the great apparent discrepancy in names and distances met with on maps and in routes.*

* Further back in the Pishin the same peculiarities are observable. Thus Arambi is pronounced almost as Arambae. Mt. Chapar is called Mt. Sapar and the Zhób valley the Jób valley. Awallá or Aúlia is the name of a malik in the Pishin.

† Villages are also constantly changing their sites, which renders a survey, which is correct for a certain year, very far from being so afterwards.

I may here remark on the names Khojak Pass—Rogháni Range—Khója Amrán Range, found on the maps as representing the celebrated hills dividing the Pishin† and Kadanei valleys. Locally the names Khójak, Rogháni, Khója Amrán are unknown as designating any set or range of hills; in fact neither the Aehakzais nor the inhabitants of the Pishin (Tor Tarius) have any general name for the hills; but every peak, spring, stream seems to have a special local name, often but little known, as might be expected among such a people as the Afghans. Khójak is the name of the Khójak river, the bed of which forms the Khojak Pass; similarly Rogháni is the name of the Pass so called, not of any hill, while Khója (or more properly Khwája) Amrán is the name of a peak in the Gwaja Pass; on its summit is a cemetery, so it is possible that Khwája Amrán was a Pir or saint when alive. Gaz (not Dahagaz as the maps have it) is the name apparently of the line of hills separating the Shálkót (Quetta) and Pishin valleys through which the Gazarband Pass runs, but this is the only line of hills which has a general name as far as I can understand. Chiltan (or Chiltán) to the S. of Quetta, Takatú, Zarghún, Píl, Kand, names along a line of hills running successively northwards from Quetta and visible from the Pishin valley, are names rather of snowy peaks than of ranges. Chapar again is the name of a high rounded snowy peak, behind these again, but visible from Pishin.

* The village of Marsingzai is also frequently called Maisingi; and Tájao is the proper name of the village usually called Zanghir Khán. Ságzai is also frequently named Tórakhar, pronounced also Tóragar (the black rock), from the hill in the neighbourhood where there is a convenient place for a camp.
† Pronounced Pishin in the neighbourhood, not Peshín as it is usually spelt.
‡ Máchka is the name of a stream joining the left bank of the Khójak about 6 miles from the summit of the Pass, and Shal of the place marked "Camping Ground" in the maps about 4 miles up the Pass from Kala Abdullah Khán. There is a perpetual spring of water there.
Hamir Rasa, or a History of Hamir, prince of Ranthambor. Translated from the Hindi.—By Brajanatha Bandyopadhyaya, Jeypore.

Author’s Preface.

In the beautiful town of Nimraná there reigns a Chohán prince, named Chandrabhan, a descendant of the celebrated Prithviráj. He is religion itself. His subjects, consisting of four castes, live in peace and plenty. He is called the emperor of Rá. Born in a clan illustrious for noble and heroic actions, he has inherited most of the virtues of his glorious ancestors, and his mind is naturally inflamed by the passion of hearing their exploits. Once, seated on the throne in regal state, he ordered me to compose for him an account of the battles fought by Hamir Chohán with Alá-uddín, Emperor of Delhi. "Tell me at length," said the Mahárájá, "the battles which were fought between Hamir and Alá-uddín, and the causes which led to them."

I am by birth a Gaur Bráhman, descended from the Rishi Atreyá. I was born at Bijawar, in the province of Rá. My name is Jodhráj, and that of my father Bálakrishna. I am a pújít and poet. My knowledge of astronomy and astrology has raised me to the highest rank in the royal court. Rájá Chandrabhan is very kind to me. He has given me houses, horses, clothes, wealth and property, so that all my wants are relieved and desires satisfied. In obedience to his orders I undertake to write in poetry the details of the history of Hamir.

Chapter I.

[The work opens with a brief resumé of the Pauranic cosmogony; and then gives the following account of the origin of the Agnikula Kshatriyas, to which caste the hero of the work belonged.]

Parašurám slaughtered the Kshatriyas twenty-one times in order to revenge himself on Sahasra Arjun, the murderer of his father. He filled a tank with their blood and offered it to his dead father, whose thirst was thereby satisfied. None escaped from his scimitar, but those who were very humble, who held each a stalk of grass by the teeth as token of submission, and who took to the guise of women. Boys, eunuchs, old men, and those who put ten fingers within their mouths, those who left their swords and fled away, and those who fell down at his feet, were also spared. He continued carrying on the work of destruction until his ancestors appeared, blessed him and told him to put a stop to further massacre and bloodshed. He then ceased and went to a jungle to pass his days there in penance.
For a time there were no Kshatriyas, none able to protect the land and the holy Śastraś. Rákshasas increased in number, the Vedas were trampled under foot, and every form of Hinduism was forgotten. These Rákshasas began to oppress the people in various ways, so that there were no longer castes and orders in society. Such being the case, all the holy sages were filled with anxiety. They consulted each other and came in a body on Abu where, in a cave, lived the mighty Paraṣurám. When all the gods, Nágas (serpents) and men had assembled, they devised a plan to extirpate the Rákshasas. Brahmá and Vaśishṭha met. The latter erected an altar. A pit was dug in the midst of it, and fire kindled. All other holy sages came to the spot. They contemplated on Śiva, who made his appearance. His hair was matted, he wore a crown and bore ashes rubbed on his body. The Ganges flowed and murmured over his head, serpents hissed, and ghosts played and danced around him. The sages stood up and prayed. "Stay here with us, gracious Śiva, otherwise we shall never be able to complete our sacrifice." The rites of sacrifice were begun, the Vedic mantras were chanted, 108 kinds of offerings and waters from all the sacred rivers were brought. All things were ready. No sooner a column of smoke rose in the air and the chanting of Vedic hymns was wafted, than all the Rákshasas came, in order to pollute the sacrifice. They made various endeavours towards that end. Now it blew a storm; anon it rained in torrents. Blood, flesh, grass and other rubbish were thrown upon the altar. Then all the holy sages—Dvaitáyana, Dábhya, Jaimini, Lomaharshana, Bhrighu, Pulaha, Āttreyá, Gautama, Garga, Sánjílyá, Bharadváj, Bálakhílya, Márakąṇḍeya, Ushaṇá, Kaushika, Basaut, Mudgála, Uddáláka and Mátanga, with Vaśishṭha at their head, complained to Brahmá and Śiva. Again, an altar was erected, a kund dug and purified, fire kindled, and every rite of sacrifice begun. Hymns of the Sáma Veda were sung. All of a sudden sprang four warriors with swords in hand from the kund. These fought with the Rákshasas and defeated them. All the sages went to the north-western corner of the Arbad Gir (Abu) and came to the cave where the great Paraṣu dwelt. They asked his benediction on the newly-created heroes. He granted the request. The goddess Śakti was invoked. She appeared and blessed them. Their energy was like fire, their eyes red like the rising sun shot forth courage, their foreheads shone like flames, and their crowns sparkled. They frowned, and the devils shook with fear.

One of these Agnikulas (fire-born) was named Chohan. He had four arms, all equipped with the weapons sword, bow, dagger and knife. He joined his hands and said to Brahmá: "What is the purpose of my creation, lord?" "Hear, my son," replied Brahmá, "do what Bhrighu tells you." Bhrighu ordered him to kill all the Rákshasas. "Śakti is with you to defend you,” said he. “She has ten hands well armed with weapons of attack and defence; she rides on a lion and wears a necklace of human heads. All the holy sages worship her; so do not fear, brave child, but fight with a heart of steel, braving all dangers for the cause of your religion.”

The Rakshasas were cut to pieces. Their blood ran in torrents. Those who escaped fled to the infernal regions. In times of peril, Sakti protected the Hindu champion from all dangers. Every time he fell at her feet, his strength and energy were doubled, and he rushed at the ranks of the devils and put them to the sword. The goddess is called Agāpūrī, because she fulfilled the hope of the holy sages, and by that name is worshipped by the Chohāns to this day.

After many generations, Rājā Jeyat Chohān was born in the village of Barbágāo. He was learned, benevolent, generous, wise and handsome. Rājpūt heroes of the thirty-six clans always waited on him. Minstrels sang of his glory and heroism. His energy increased like the heat of the morning sun, and he was feared by his enemies both by day and night. He was very kind to the poor, he relieved their wants, the moment he heard their complaints.

Once the Rāo was out in a forest on a hunting-excursion, accompanied by all the skilful huntsmen in his territories. He saw a white boar and pursued it very closely. It ran into a dense jungle, which was full of windings. He was separated from his train. The figure of an ascetic met his view. Rishi Padam, the best of all sages, sat there, engaged in deep contemplation. The prince left off chasing after the game. He fell prostrate before the sage, joined his hands and thus began to pray: “I am very fortunate, that I am able to see thee. My sins were forgiven me the moment I looked on thy body. Protect me, bless me, O thou merciful one, have mercy on me. I am ever the object of thy care, O thou, who art an ocean of virtues, I bow down before thee. Thou art the possessor of unfading beauty, all-wise and all-powerful. The great name of Rāma is always on thy lips. All the ages dwell in thee, and thou givest the three worlds what they wish for. Thy austere penance has made thee almost equal to Vishnu, Śiva and Ganesha. Place thy hand on my head, O lord! and bless me.” The sage was greatly pleased with the Rāo’s prayers. He blessed him. “Build a fort yonder on the hill, my son,” said he, “dwell there and worship Śiva.”

When Rājā Jeyat returned to his capital, he called a council of his ministers and vassals and consulted all the learned astrologers of his court. A lucky hour was fixed to lay the foundation-stone of a town and that of its fort. The time was 7.30 in the morning of Saturday, the third of the new moon, the day of the feast of Akṣhayaya Trītiyā, the moon being on the sign Mithuna, in the month of Vaisākha (April). Offerings were made to Śiva and Ganeśa, and large sums of money distributed among the Brāhmaṇs.

The newly built town of the Rāo was full of temples and squares. It resembled Amarāvati, the city of Indra. The temples were very beautiful, lofty, and decorated with screens of lattice-work. Expanding flags, glittering kalaśas, lofty gateways, were abundant in every place. The front doors of shops, facing the street, were ornamented, and the walls adorned with pictures. Handsome women, rivalling Rati, the wife of Kāmadeva (Cupid), gave beauty to the scene. The gates of houses, the seats on either side of them, and the balconies were very exquisitely made. Perfumes of various kinds filled the air with fragrance. All the four castes and Āśrams lived there in happiness, each following its own profession. The people were all of a forgiving nature, kind, charitable and hospitable to strangers. The splendid town was named Ranthambor.

All the Bhils, inhabiting the mountain fastnesses, readily acknowledged the power of the Rāo and recognised in him their sovereign. It is said that Mahādeva, being pleased with his devotion, appeared before him and blessed him, saying, "Reign in glory, my son; reign as long as your virtues enable you to do so."

A very curious story is told of the erection of the fort. The wall of the portico fell down as often as it was raised. The Rājā was struck with wonder and was extremely anxious to find out the cause of this mysterious occurrence. At last, finding all resources fail, he summoned up all his courage and said—"Let me die, for my death alone can give stability to the wall." He seated himself at the foundation, ready to carry out his desperate resolution, when Rāvana and Basava, two warlike and loyal Bhils, exclaimed—"Rāo Jeyat, the fort is ours, although you have a nominal title to it. You are but our guest. The fort is emphatically ours. It behoves you, therefore, to cut off our heads and raise the wall upon them." Rāvana said, "Only look after my son Bhoj." The brave Bhils were beheaded, their heads placed as foundation-stones, and the wall built thereon became as firm and lasting as a rock. The fort is said to have all the advantages of position and to be impregnable to an enemy. It stands to this day in all its majesty, a monument of the martial tact and skill of the ancient Rājpūts.

The austere penances of the sage Padam greatly frightened Indra. His throne shook. In fear he sent Cupid to allure the sage. The god of love with his seductive train appeared before the saint. Spring bent his bow, and shot arrows drawn from his quiver. The apsaras danced, and Kinnaras sang. Their captivating strains charmed not only men, but even the gods. The forest became full of flowers and bees, cuckoos and peacocks. The sweet note of the cuckoo caught every heart and inflamed it with ardent lust. But the soul of the sage could not be moved. The beauties of spring had no effect upon it: it remained as firm as a rock.

Spring failed. Cupid gave orders to summer. The earth became hot with the sun's vertical rays. The Rishi opened his eyes. He saw, very near to him, a shady banian tree with spreading branches, a beautiful pond full to the brim, a very handsome building wherein sat a troop of heavenly maidens singing soul-enchanting airs and revelling as they liked, with a cool, soft breeze blowing and scarfs flying round about their persons. He saw Rambahá and Urváši braiding their hair before a mirror and rubbing their bodies with musk, camphor, sandal-wood paste, saffron and other perfumes. The daughters of Gandharvas and Kinnaras, dressed exquisitely, were entertaining one another by placing garlands of flowers, each on the other's neck, smiling and darting quick glances on the sage. But the Rishi closed his eyes and became lost in contemplation.

Summer failed. Then the rainy season came and bowed before Cupid. Dark, heavy clouds hung on the air. It became intensely dark. Cold winds began to blow from all quarters. The flashes of lightning were seen on the sky, thunders roared, the gates of heaven were opened, and rain poured forth in torrents. The kalopin (thrush) and the papiyá filled the air with their melody. The nymphs of Cupid sang sweetly as they waved to and fro in the swing. Now it rained fast, and they in a hurry began to run hither and thither before the sage. A gust of wind blew. It removed their fine, loose clothes, displaying their persons of roseate hue which none can see without falling entangled in the snare of Cupid. The bees hummed, the frogs croaked, and heavenly nymphs roused one another in the art of fascination. Divested of their clothing they danced, they sang, they played at balls, they made garlands of flowers and threw them at each other; they cast sidelong glances which, like arrows, pierced the heart of gods; they laughed, and their gentle laughter thrilled in every pulse and brought on a fever of love. Yet the soul of Padam could not be moved.

The rainy season failed. Cupid said, "Let autumn go and allure the sage from his austere penance." The autumnal clouds were seen hovering on the sky. All the rivers and tanks, being full of transparent water, reflected the rays of the sun, bearing on their broad bosoms lotuses of different colours. The pretty kingfisher, the humming bee, the ducks and the reflections of the moon were dancing round about the white lotuses. The earth wore a bright dress and looked like a matron in white. The jassamine was in blossom. The celestial nymphs sang, taking in their hands the bows and arrows of Cupid. The soft strains of their songs, wafted by a gentle breeze, wounded the hearts of those whose lovers were not at home.
The lamp of the sky shone, and the coolness of night enraptured the heavenly beings of both sexes. In all the charms of uncovered beauty, each of the bewitching nymphs began to take a bath in a pond close to the sage. They, in a body, looked at him, and their looks were full of lust. Now they danced, now they swam, now they glanced with pride on their own persons. Tufts of hair fell on their cheeks; they seemed as if a number of black serpents had assembled to suck nectar from their cheeks. Yet the soul of the sage could not be moved: its firmness remained unshaken.

Then came with fury the severe winter. Snow began to fall and all creatures to shudder. The nymphs were in the arms of their lovers, and each pair looked as if made of one piece. The dashing Urvasi came to the sage and asked him for shelter; but her charms availed her nothing, and thus was winter defeated.

Then came with pride the season of dew and bowed before Cupid. The vegetable kingdom wore a green dress. The mango and kadamba looked merry in full blossom. Three kinds of breezes began to blow. The creeping plants eagerly embraced trees. The earth became covered with rich verdure. All was life. The branches of trees hung down laden with fruits and flowers. The bees began to hum all around them, awakening the softer passions in the hearts of all creatures. The nymphs laid aside their modesty and began to beat drums, sing and dance. Saffron and red powder (abir) they threw at one another. Intoxicated with lust, the nymphs began to celebrate the great festival of Holī. [Here follows a glowing description of the festival as celebrated by the nymphs of heaven, which we omit.] The queen of the heavenly nymphs, Urvasī, ran away in feigned fear at the fall of a ball on one of her cheeks. She passed by the sage smiling gently, singing and dancing. Now Cupid applied the arrow named unmād to his bow. The bees began to hum, and three kinds of breezes blew. The bolt was shot at the breast of the father of all Rishis. His eyes opened. Another arrow was shot; his heart wandered. He saw the nymph and became greatly delighted. She ran to throw a handful of the red powder and a ball at him. He rose, he played, he embraced her. She captivated him and his reason gave way to passion. She darted quick glances at him, and they like arrows struck his heart. She pressed sweet kisses on his cheeks, and he felt a fever of love. Thus succeeded the season of dew in alluring the sage from his austere penance. The latter lost his reason and thought Urvasī to be his own, but the nymph vanished, triumphant at her success. Stung by separation, he breathed his last in the month of Māgh in Samvat 1140, the moon being on the sign Adrá.

The body of Ala-uddin was made of his head, that of Hamîr of his breast, and those of Muhammad Sháh and Mir Gabru of his hands.
Chapter II.

In the fort of Ranthambor Hamír Chohán was born to Ráo Jeyat at midday, on Sunday, the twelfth of the wane, in the month of Kár-tika, Samvat 1141.* All the members of the royal family were greatly delighted. A sumptuous feast was given to all the Bráhmaṇs of Ajmer and Chitor, and large gifts were distributed among beggars, minstrels, musicians, and others. Rejoicings prevailed in the city. It happened that on the birthday of the child a servant was polishing an iron pot with a stone taken at random from the ground. The pot turned into gold. The man was greatly surprised. He took the stone to the king and informed him of its quality. It was predicted of Hamír that he would wage a terrible war with Álá-uddín Khilji, of Dehli. He was married to Aşá, the beautiful daughter of Ráo Puar of Abu, and, on the death of his father, ascended the throne of Ranthambor.

The great Álá-uddín was born a contemporary of Hamír. It is said that the princess, his mother, seeing the newly born babe very ugly and ill-shaped, commanded a nurse to carry it away and replace it by a child of handsome appearance. The nurse obeyed her orders, and thus was the boy, who was to be an emperor, brought up in the nursery of a carder. His foster-father called him Álá-uddín. In the days of his boyhood he would sometimes play at king, making of his playmates, one the vizier, another the Bakshí, a third the attendant. He would dismiss some and appoint others. While in the king’s palace, the son of the carder would play at his father’s profession.

Ten miles to the north of Dehli there was a temple of the Sharaoji sect of Buddhists. A widow, daughter of a merchant, used to visit it every day. Once Parasnáth, the principal tirthankar, appeared and in heavenly accents said—“Daughter, I am pleased with thy vows; blest be thou with the enjoyment of two sons.”

The woman replied—“Lord, I am but a poor widow, and therefore if I should be brought to bed of a child, it would bring a stain upon my name and that of my family.”

The heavens opened and the following words were heard. “None shall be able to perceive thy womb. Thou shalt be delivered of twins at the time thou dost please to appoint. They will be very rich, and their names will spread far and wide.”

* This date, as also the one on the preceding page, is wrong. According to Muhammadan historians the siege of Ranthambor took place in A. D. 1299-1300, and according to the Hamír Rásá (infrá, p. 263), Hamír was at the time twenty-eight years old, so he must have been born in Samvat 1328, Saka 1133 and A. D. 1271. Ed.
All was profound silence. There was none but a carpenter at work on the outside who overheard this prophecy. He thought that a very fortunate mother the widow would be, and so if he could seduce her and take her away from her parents, he would indeed be very happy. In the disguise of a merchant he came every day to the temple. Many days after, having availed himself of an opportunity, he said, "Virtuous woman, you are blessed, for you walk in God. If it please you, my rath (carriage) is at your service." The widow thanked him for his kind attention, and, believing in the honesty of his purpose, accepted the favour. Many days passed away. The carpenter said, "Merchant's daughter, a pious and devoted visitor of temples should appear before her gods in her best dress, and wearing ornaments." The widow not anticipating any evil, commenced doing so. By and by he gained her confidence so much that he succeeded by cunning in taking her to the city of Ujjain in Málwá. He made her a proposal of marriage, which she rejected with scorn. "You have brought me," said she, "away from my parents; very good, but I will never consent to your marrying me." When the lady's jewels and ornaments, the means of their support, had been all sold, the carpenter addressed her—"Merchant's daughter, do you remember the sound which you had the good fortune to hear while in the temple of Parsnáth?"

The widow replied, "Yes, I do." Immediately after, she fell on her knees and prayed to Parsnáth, when lo! by the command of the god she gave birth to twins of very handsome appearance. One of them was named Basanta Pál, and the other Tej Pál. Accidentally the mother found a very large pan of gold and diamonds buried under ground. Fortune smiled on her from that moment, but she did not let the carpenter see her babes. One day at the eager and humble request of the man, the twins were shown to him, but alas! poor creature! the very sight of them brought on instant death.

When the twin-brothers grew up to boyhood, they insisted upon their mother telling them, although she was very loth to do so, where their father was. As soon as they had the knowledge of their miraculous birth, they thought themselves to be the favourites of fortune and set about their business with redoubled energy. On attaining majority they, with all their treasure and establishment, removed to Dehli. There they began to carry on mercantile transactions, and, by giving very handsome nazzars, rose to the notice of his majesty the emperor. But all other Sharaojis of the city looked upon them as aliens, and therefore did not allow them to take part in their social festivities. However at a meeting of that sect on Grinár, they were, on the testimony of the Sharaojis of Ujjain, received into caste. It was proposed to build two temples on that memorable spot.
A few days after returning to Dehli, the merchants called a pandit to search for a lucky hour in which to lay the foundation-stones of the temples. The pandit replied, "I shall tell you the time, but it is no use your building the temples, because an emperor has been born who, it is predicted, will pull down all the sacred edifices to the dust." The merchants said "Where lives such an emperor?" "In a carder's house, playing in the dirt," was the pandit's reply. The merchants were shown the house. They filled two silver plates with mohars and, placing two diamonds on them, presented them to Ala-uddin at the playground. Thereupon the boy said—"See, Sirs, I am but a poor carder. I need not such valuables. Pray, take these to the prince in the royal palace." The merchants replied "You are our prince, the sole master of our lives and property." Ala-uddin looked pleased. He kept with him only the diamonds and divided the mohars among his playmates. Then said he, "How do you know, merchants, that I am your prince? Who told you so?" "A pandit" was the merchants' reply.

Ala-uddin.—"Bring the pandit to me, and without delay give him these silver plates."

Accordingly the merchants took the pandit to Ala-uddin, who asked him as follows:

Ala-uddin.—'Bráhman, are you sure that I shall be an emperor?'

Pandit.—'Yes, certainly I am. May it please your Royal Highness to grant the request of the merchants.'

Ala-uddin.—'Merchants, what do you want to be done?'

Merchants.—'We beseech your Royal Highness to give us permission to build two temples.'

Ala-uddin.—'Never can I grant such an unreasonable request. I have made it a point in my life to pull down all temples to the dust. The gods have unjustly cursed me by throwing me into such a miserable state, and I will drain the last drop of my blood in wreaking vengeance on them. But as you have done me honour and made me aware of what I shall be, I feel bound to make an exception in your case. Go and build the temples, but on their roofs raise mud-walls to the height of a cubit and a quarter. Those walls shall I pull down, when I shall set out on a crusade against gods and their holy buildings.'

The playmates of Ala-uddin, when they returned home from the playground, told their parents, how their Ala distributed mohars among them and ordered the merchants of Ujjain to build temples. On hearing this news the emperor had Ala-uddin brought to the palace, while the boy who had been brought up there was sent to the carder's hovel.

Ala-uddin married the daughter of Bubak Sháh of Kandahár. A year after his marriage, he ascended the throne of Dehli. It is written that he besieged eighty-four forts and captured them. In the course of taking a certain fort, a devil was made a captive by four warriors, and a bastion was, by the command of the emperor, raised over his head. In the dead of the night, while all was still, a sound came: “Alá-uddín, Alá-uddín, mighty monarch, dost thou presume to keep me buried for ever under these walls? huge pillars are but as hairs on my head. Release me, or this very moment I am free and thy bastion broken.”

Alá-uddín.—“Rest, unquiet spirit, I give thee the entire right over the throne of Suleman.”

Chapter III.

Once the emperor Alá-uddín intended to go out for a hunt. Handús were mounted upon elephants, and many noble steeds saddled. All the vassals, then present in the imperial court, with all their retainers and acquaintances, marched, each wearing his hunting dress. Numerous heroes strutted along with an important air, some restless in pride, others advancing in solemn gait. Trumpets, drums and other musical instruments were sounded. Alá-uddín took with him a queen, who in beauty and fascination could well be compared with the fairy Urvasí of heaven. She charmed him, as the white moon-beams charm the eager chakor, and the pretty lotus binds the bee in love. Packs of dogs, leopards, hawks and other beasts and birds of prey followed the hunters. Thick columns of dust rose high up in the air and hid the sun. The loud sound of the drums seemed, as if peals of thunder were heard from the dark clouds of the rainy season. Numbers of horses ran briskly and passed off like meteors. The imperial veterans clad in mail, began to play at arms, wrestle, bend their bows, adjust arrows and display their skill in various kinds of heroic feats.

At last the hunters entered a forest. They saw that it was very deep, and that profound darkness reigned over it, and heard the murmuring of rivulets and the rushing of springs.

[Here follows a description of an intrigue between Chimná Begam and one Muhammad Sháh, which we omit.]

The queen confessed her guilt, but the emperor doted upon her and, fearing lest the execution of the Sheik should be followed by suicide on her part, exiled him, saying, “Be gone, Sheik, be gone for ever from the confines of my dominions. I will kill the man who may chance to give thee refuge. Thou art deserving of the gallows. Muhammad Sháh, there is no one on earth who is so bold as to shelter thee from my anger, thee who hast wronged me. I will circulate what thou hast done to the four corners of the world. Dost thou know any prince or emperor who can promise safe-keeping to a culprit banished my territories? Canst thou tell me his name who is mightier than I, and to whose door thou dost intend to go seeking protection? There is no place on this wide earth, but Mecca, where thou canst be safe from utter ruin and destruction."

The Sheik having joined his hands, replied, "Mighty is the father of all creatures. The fertile earth is never barren of heroes. I shall go to the court of one who will, I am sure, receive me hospitably and challenge you to fight with him." Then bowing he continued, "I will never return to Dehli and bow down to you again with prayers for shelter, but meet you on the battle-field and show you my skill there."

Muhammad Sháh returned to his house, sad at the thought of parting from his dear friends and relatives. He went to his brother Mir Gabru to bid him farewell. "Why are you sorry, brother?" asked the latter. "Has any one done you wrong? Tell me. My heart burns with anger." "My doings are my enemy, dear Gabru!" replied Muhammad Sháh. "I am no longer destined to eat and drink here in Dehli. How can I then live here, and who on earth can keep me within the city wall. Think on these things and be silent."

These words struck Mir Gabru as thunder. Immediately he fell in a swoon. Muhammad Sháh consoled him in various ways, saying, "Do not be sorry, brother; serve his Majesty, the emperor, and live in peace and plenty." "Then go to Mecca, dear Muhammad Sháh," replied Mir Gabru, "or live with Hamír, if that generous Ráo will give you house and shelter."

The Sheik went, leaving the confines of Ala-uddín's dominions. He took with him twelve companies of soldiers, five elephants, carriages, servants and young male and female slaves. Numerous camels followed his train, laden with fine looking tents and furniture. His wife went with him. On his way, he used to hunt deer wherever he made a halt. His men were all of one mind with him.

A confidential herald named Sultán Khán was sent with the exile to report on his whereabouts, and to inform the potentate, who might chance to give him shelter, of the cause of his banishment.

Muhammad wandered far and wide, but nowhere could he find refuge. He went to the courts of almost all the princes, both Hindú and Musalmán; but none dared to protect him, and thereby incur the displeasure of Ala-uddín. At last he intended to go to the durbár of Hamír and arrived outside the walls of Ranthambor. He saw the strength of the fort, the height and inaccessibility of the hill upon which it was situated, and various indications of the might of its royal master, and became full of delightful assurance of his warm reception there. When his horses and elephants had been tied, he took his meal. A carpet was spread in his tent, whereon sat his heroes, ministers and friends. They were asked to go to the Ráo and inform him of all particulars. He said "First tell him my saláms, next the events which have led to my banishment; tell him that if it please him to meet me, I shall wait on his royal presence. You shall be able to know by these statements how virtuous and religious he is. Look at his features and examine them with care."

The heralds met with a warm reception. They informed the Ráo of all things as they had happened. The latter asked, "Is the Sheik safe, is he well?" He was delighted and sent his son to call the exile to the fort.

Muhammad Sháh started dressed in his best clothes to wait on Hamír. He took with him five horses, one elephant, one bow of Multán, made of nine pieces of buffalo horn, a sharp sword, a beautiful palanquin, two pieces of ruby, a necklace of pearls, two hawks and two hunting dogs. His escort went on foot. The train stopped at the principal gate of the fort, awaiting orders. Some nobles of the royal court were sent to receive the Sheik. They took him to the audience chamber of the Ráo, who, with all the members of his council stood up, embraced him and enquired after his health. The Sheik touched the Ráo's feet with both his hands and stood up, having joined them in submission. After having offered him the costly presents, he said, "Grant me shelter, generous Ráo, shelter me in my distress. I have gone to the courts of the kings of Kandesh, Khábul, Multán, Káshmír, Guzerat, Gandwáná and Bengal, but none has dared to receive me: they all have tried to get rid of me, the sooner the better. I am at your mercy, noble lord, save me in this extremity."

Hamír replied, smiling, "So powerful is Alá-uddín that none has ventured to shelter you from his anger. Live here safe, Sheik, live here within the fort, under the shadow of my protection. I, Ráo Hamír, will defend you, even if my defending you should cost me my life. Need I tell you more?" He accepted the presents and thus spoke out his mind—"I will give up my body, wealth, fort and kingdom, but be sure, Sheik, the emperor will never be able to get you."

"May it please you, mighty Ráo," said the Sheik, "to consider all the consequences that will follow, before you promise me safe-keeping. I have wandered far and wide over India and seen that almost all the Kháns and Sultáns, Rájás, Ráos and Ránás fear the power of Alá-uddín. He said at my parting, that if in any part of this wide world, supported by Shesh, any one should give me protection, he will cut him in pieces. He who incurs his displeasure must not hope for life. Promise me safety and have the glory of keeping a houseless and helpless creature with you, after having fully considered all these particulars." "You need not warn me," replied Hamír, of the danger I would expose myself to by giving you refuge, and thereby provoke my anger. I have spoken my mind, and do you think I can retract the words which I have once said? The descendants of the Choháns are never false to their promise. My firmness in acting up to what I have determined to do can never be shaken by the love of life and self-interest. Be patient, Sheik, and live here without fear. The mountains may move, and the polar star leave its fixed place, yet be sure, Muhammad Sháh, the honour of my resolution can never be violated. It stands in unfaded glory for evermore."

The following presents were made to Muhammad Sháh; a bow, golden ornaments, a necklace of pearls, a turban set with diamonds, and a shawl. A jaghír worth five lacs of rupees was also given him. A noble palace was appointed for his residence. The Council broke up with great joy and excitement. Muhammad Sháh went to his new mansion, riding on a horse. His heart became easy at the sight of various comforts which were stored there for him. Then the Ráo gave a grand feast to him and his companions.

The imperial herald, who had followed the Sheik to the fort, addressed himself to Hamír—"Do not give shelter to Muhammad Sháh, great Ráo, because by doing so you will incur the displeasure of the most powerful emperor in the world. The mighty Álá-uddín is an inspired warrior. If the weak match with the strong, be sure, prince, they will come off the losers. Listen to my words, attend to my advice. You are a descendant of a family which has played an important part in the history of your country. Why leave an ocean big with invaluable pearls and rubies for a worthless tank full of mud and weeds? What qualities has this Sheik? See, he has left all his possessions for the vile enjoyment of a female. I know that you are familiar with all princely principles; one of them is, 'Let a man die, if his death alone can ensure the safety of a family; forsake a house, if its destruction can save a village; let a city go to destruction, if by leaving it you can preserve the welfare of a country.' Why do you push all souls to death for the safety of one, and that one an ungrateful wretch, having neither reason nor conscience. Your refugee is the vilest of all creatures. He had not even the slightest scruple to defile the bed of his master. Think, before it is too late. The anger of Álá-uddín is like a red flame of fire which burns all that come in contact with it. His power destroys all who have the rashness to incur his displeasure. See, even the gods have fled away, leaving their temples. On the other hand, if you do not give refuge to the Sheik, your friendship with the emperor will become stronger and stronger every day. Why drop poison in a pot full of nectar? You will have to pay very dearly for your folly. Consider, therefore, now in time and get rid of the Sheik as soon as you can. See, Rāvana conquered the three worlds and had perfect control over the gods, men and serpents; but when he made Raghunāth his enemy, the splendid and strong fort of Lankā was sacked, burnt and pulled in the dust. Who can subdue Alā-uddīn? If you think you can, you will certainly be destroyed.”

Hamîr.—“O herald, I can never lie. See what will be the condition of that poor, deserted man, if I deny him protection. I will draw my sword in the teeth of all difficulties, fight with Alā-uddīn and crush his pride. Either I shall be transported to heaven a little early, or continue reigning in my fort of Ranthambor. Go, thou messenger, and tell the emperor that the Sheik is safe under the roof of Hamîr Chohān, and that preparations for war are being made within the fort.”

The herald went to Dehli and, having joined his hands and bowed down to Alā-uddīn, thus prayed, “Dreaded Majesty, the Sheik Muhammad Shāh wandered far and wide, over the northern, the eastern and the southern parts of India, but nowhere did he find shelter. At last he went to Ranthambor and humbly prayed to the Rāo of that place, who took pity on him and promised him safe-keeping within the walls of his fort.”

Vazir Mihram Khān.—“Never has the Rāo done so. How can he, a vassal to his Majesty, afford house and shelter to one banished the dominions of his lord and master? Never say such words again.”

Herald.—“Vazir, my words are not false, but true to the letter.”

Alā-uddīn.—Write a firman to Hamîr, and then you shall be able to know whether he speaks the truth or falsehood.

Accordingly a firman was written and sent by the same herald to Ranthambor.

Firman.—“Hamîr, be not obstinate; yield; do not give asylum to a thief. I am called the master of Dehli, and you are a mere Rāo. What can you hope to gain by incurring my displeasure? Why make yourself culpable? Take as much land and gold as you wish for. Send back the criminal to me, the moment you read this firman.”

Hamîr’s reply.—“Attack me, fall upon me, but I will never send you Muhammad Shāh. I have promised him shelter, and for the monarchy of all the world, I will never break my word.”

The emperor’s blood boiled. He rebuked the Vazir for denying the truth of the herald’s statements. Another firman was written and sent to the Rāo.

Firman.—“How many forts, have you, Hamîr, and how strong are they, that you are so proud and stubborn? Consider, know that I am a gifted hero. Send the Sheik. Be reasonable.”

Hamîr’s reply.—“Your Majesty need not send me so many firmans.
I will never set aside my resolution. How can I deliver into your hands the man whom I have promised safe-keeping?" (To the herald.) "Go to the emperor and say to him, that if it be possible for the sun to rise in the West and the waters of the Ganges to flow from her mouth to the source, then will it be possible for Hamir to violate what he has deliberately resolved upon. I rule over the territory given us by the sage Padam. When the time appointed for the destruction of my fort will arrive, none shall be able to avert its fate. What is not fated to be, will never come to pass; while what is fated to be, must happen. Wealth and death are in the hands of God, then why fear men? I have given my word to the Sheik, and how can I forsake him? To be faithless to a refugee goes hard against the virtues of the Kshatriyas. I will never join my hands and bow down before Alá-uddín. If he fall upon me, I will fight; I care neither for my life nor kingdom." Hamir added the following words to his letter: "Far from me be the thought of sending you Muhammad Sháh, I will never send you even his picture. These are my true words, true in every respect."

The emperor, on reading the reply of Hamir, became very angry; but, at the request of Mirram Khán, the prime-minister, a third firman was, in consideration of his religion, sent to Hamir.

Firman.—"Thousands and tens of thousands of men like you are licking the dust of my feet; many brave heroes, such as you, have I have brought under subjugation. Rule in safety over the territory of Ranthambor. Why stake life and kingdom for the sake of a villain? Come with him and meet with me. You are my servant, and so shall you ever remain although you fall not at my feet. If you continue to persist in your unwise resolution, I, emperor Alá-uddín Khilji, do promise to burn you and your house to dust. Do not be obstinate, Hamir. Why try to wake the sleeping Ganges—disturb the peaceable state of things? My anger is like a red flame of fire which burns mountains and forests. The Rájás of the four quarters of India pay me tribute. Who dares oppose me? Can a tank be equal to a river? No it never can."

Hamir's reply.—"Logs of wood are burnt to ashes by fire, but water can put it out, however strong it may be. Listen, emperor Alá-uddín, all must live their time. Who can kill a man when he is not fated to die? If I send the Sheik to you, the sun, a witness of my promise, will be ashamed of my cowardice and villainy. I, Rao Hamir Chohan of Ranthambor, do hereby declare that I will never violate my promise. Come, lose no time, march and fall upon me."

Then went the imperial herald dejected to Dehli. He said, "Mighty monarch, Hamir of the fort of Ranthambor does not care at all for your power. His cavalry, infantry and heroes are numerous. Besides, firmness in keeping their resolution is a hereditary virtue of the Choháns. You have conquered the whole world and made many potent chiefs and monarchs powerless and humble before your rod, but now Hamír matches with you and challenges you to fight with him. Either he or you must be victorious. I have advised him many times as to the folly of his keeping the exile under his roof. He frowned, his blood boiled with anger, even at the mention of the name 'Muhammad Sháh.' "I shall fight with the emperor, face to face," said he, and cut the imperial forces to pieces. Then at last I will offer my head to the great Mahádeo, that my glory may be sung in the worlds below and the heavens above. I have made a resolution. How can I break through it? I do not fear the anger of Alá-uddín, I do not fear his massive arms, I do not fear his fury, nay I do not fear death, but I fear dishonour, and above all, I fear staining the virtues of my renowned ancestors.'"

Chapter IV.

Alá-uddín, wondering at the intrepidity and decision of character of Hamír, made up his mind to besiege the fort of Ranthambor. With a view to obtain information as to the Ráo, his forces and the government of his states, he made the following queries to Sultán Khán, the herald, who was well conversant with those particulars.

Emperor.—"How strong are the forces of Hamír?"

Herald.—"Imperial Majesty, Hamír has 117,000 horse, and his foot are 200,000 in number. In their midst rides he, the great Ráo, on an elephant. He has 500 commanders, tall, robust and well-skilled in the art of war. He commands the allegiance of the princes of Chitor, Narwárgar and Gwáliar. The forces of one of his vassals, named Randhir, consist of 31,000 horse, 80 elephants, and 10,000 heroes all invincible."

Emperor.—"How strong is the fort of Ranthambor?"

Herald.—"The fort is very strong, and inaccessible to an enemy. Four roads lead to it, and eighty-four passes, very close and narrow, go winding amidst its surrounding hills. Five large tanks, fed by mountain-torrents and therefore deep beyond compare and filled to the brim, strengthen the defence of the fort. Temples of Ganeśa, Siva, Nandi, Bhairav, Durgá and her attendant goddesses are situated within it. It is guarded by a body of 600 Nágas, all veteran soldiers, and 70 very wide-mouthed cannons, which cannot be moved, and at whose report mountains tremble, women miscarry and rivers become dry. Its supply of provisions and ammunition is immense. Two very large underground stores are well stocked with grain, weighing one crore, ten lacs and ten thousand maunds. The weight of the sunn cord and pack-thread stored within the fort is ten lacs of maunds; that of bullets four lacs, that of ghé twenty thousand, that of tejra (opium husks or the capsules of the poppy) ten thousand, and that of powder nine lacs. Heaps upon heaps of salt are piled like hills. There are different stores for camphor, musk, saffron, spices, ḫtar, oil, iron and lead."

Emperor.—"How does Hamír rule over his Ráj? Describe his morals and ways of government."

Herald.—"In the character of Hamír are combined the highest qualities of a king with those of a moral man. As a king, he is a great lover of justice; merciful to his subjects, affable to the virtuous, charitable and benevolent to the poor. No tax is levied in his states. His people, 6,710,000 in number, live in peace and prosperity. As a moralist, he is strict in the performance of all the austerities of his religion, with unflinching courage, bold decision of character, and total disregard for his life, when it stands between him and his promise. He abstains from flesh and wine, tolerates no Muhammadan forms of worship, neither báṅg (call to prayer) nor nimáţ (prayers). He has pulled down all the mosques in his territory and erected temples in their stead, whose walls resound with prayers offered up to Hari. The hymns of the god are chanted, and his words read over the length and breadth of his dominion. The Korán can never be pronounced there. No man can jest with a woman other than his wife. The son pays the greatest possible respect to the father, talking with his face down all the while. A woman who proves false to her husband is punished with death.

Emperor.—"Tell me in brief the charity of Hamír."

Herald.—"Five moχars, each weighing 5 tolas, and 12 cows with their calves are given every morning at sunrise to pious Bráhmaṇs, who are daily fed in the palace. 107 maunds of khitohari (cooked rice and dal) are daily distributed among disabled men, and 12 maunds of grain are scattered to be picked up by birds."

Emperor.—"Tell me the character of his queen."

Herald.—"His queen Aşá is the perfect pattern of chastity and is always engaged in doing her duties as a wife. As a mother she is a Sunti of her age, and is very kind to her subjects. Hamír has a prince and a princess both unequalled in beauty. The sun stops in his airy path to get a glimpse of their royal persons, and flies buzz about their mouths as they do about a sweet-scented flower. In brief, mighty monarch, both the Ráo and his wife hold under their bodies and devote their minds to things of a transcendental nature, deep abstractions of philosophy and mental discipline. The great Chohán prefers the substantial to the unsubstantial, the lasting to the frail and evanescent. As a true Rájpút, he does not lack physical courage: brave and firm like a rock, he never shows his back to his enemies. His subjects are all happy because of the virtues of their ruler. The young as well as the old, the rich as well as the poor, the able as well as the disabled, all find in him their affectionate friend."
Emperor.—“What is the age of Hamír?”

Herald.—“Hamír is an accomplished youth of 28 and, at this early age, a miracle of genius, prudence, heroism, wisdom and intelligence. When he comes to the durbár, the minstrel Maqná thus sings his praises:

‘Bestower of gifts, great Ráo of Ranthambor, the hero of heroes, that bring on the golden age in this corrupt world, your virtues are incomparable, and your might almost divine. Your truth is like that of Harishchandra; charity like that of Karan; attainments in learning like those of Bhoj; sympathy with the poor and administration of relief like those of Vikram; and beauty of features like that of Cupid. You are a Brikbhánu in power. Your words are sweet and full of love, and you are well versed in fourteen kinds of arts and sciences. Your wealth is like Indra’s, your treasury and stores like Kuber’s, whereon Riddhi (prosperity) and Siddhi (fulfilment), two wives of the god Gañesa, always preside. There are eight kinds of siddhis in your states, and all pieces of iron are turned into gold.’

Thick, green gardens lie round about his fort, while around them are deep and dark forests. The mango trees, the pomegranate, lime, apple, berry, orange, khírni, plantain, cocoa nut, dates, chíranjí and jack, all are loaded with their sweet, delicious fruits. There are very many ümer trees, hundred kinds of khyotás, the large acacia and the beautiful khír. The bees hum amidst various flowers and draw nectar with great glee. Here you can see in full bloom and blossom the rose and the jassamine; there the ketáki by its sweet smell draws together and charms a number of bees. Here beds of keora, johí, jay, sindup and sabbu beautify the scene; there the pádal, chameí, kókbelá, satrang, srikhand, kund, málatí and shevítí give fragrance to the air. The matia plants are loaded with flowers and the lállbang, vine, the nimble madhój and other creepers are plentiful. There are palms and tamáls on the banks of tanks, which bear on their broad bosoms the dancing red lotus and the white lotus with the bee, enjoying itself, being hid amidst the petals. All around are the lofty hills covered with dense forests and clad in green. Waterfalls pour from on high, where beside the waters play the peacock, the duck, the chakravák, the suk, the chatrak and the blackbird.”

Chapter V.

Álā-udderin’s soliloquy.—“I do not care for the pride of Hamír. In a moment I can bring him to my feet, knock down his fort, seize the criminal Muhammad Sháh, and drag him to Dehli. Sure as my name is Álā-udderin, I will do all these things. A Ráo, possessing one fort only, vaunts so much of his might! Surely I cannot bear it. Yet I have scruples as to the certainty of my victory. I know not what might be the issue of my attack, if I rashly attempt it at once. Defeat, as well as victory, is in the hand of God. Who knows that I shall never be brought to the wall? It is, therefore, that I think it advisable to act up to the council of my ministers and vassals. I shall call a grand meeting and court discussion.

An open durbar was held at the Council hall. The emperor thus addressed it:

"My noble Kháns, Súltáns, Ránás and Ráos—you have been for a long time aware that a Sheik, named Muhammad Sháh, was for some heinous crime banished the dominions of our empire; you are also aware, that he wandered far and wide, without house and shelter, till he came to Ranthambor, where he found protection under the roof of the Chohán Chief of that place. I myself, through one of my heralds, tried in various ways to convince the Ráo of the folly of his action, the certainty of his destruction and that of his fort, if he persisted in refusing to send me the culprit. But he, in spite of my friendly advice and remonstrance, cares not at all for me and my power and in a haughty style challenges me to fight. (The audience shouted "Let us draw our swords, let us draw our swords.") Hear, my noble Chiefs, in order to justly punish the folly and obstinacy of the Ráo, I have determined to capture his fort, and plant on its tower the standard of the crescent. (The audience rose up from their seats and, reverently bowing their heads, stood ready to receive orders.) Be resolved, therefore, one and all, to fight. Faint not, fear not, but with hearts of steel let us march to curb the pride of the upstart and to show him the power, glory and energy of the followers of the true faith."

All the chiefs, assembled in the council, exclaimed with one voice—"We are ready to die, emperor, ready to sacrifice our lives and interests for this sacred and profitable cause: sacred because it concerns Islámism, and profitable because it concerns the interest of our monarch, the sole preserver of our lives and property. Here is a rule and a very good one it is—If you go to hunt a jackal, be armed with all weapons necessary to hunting a lion. The proud Ráo challenges you to fight. It behoves us, therefore, to attack him in his own house, demolish his fort and burn him and all that belongs to him to ashes."

All was excitement, when the Vazir Mihrám Khán, with joined hands, thus began: "May it please your Majesty, I ask your royal permission to speak only a few words. There is a great difference between hunting a lion and hunting a jackal. Do not think them all one. Why do you increase your anger? Why make much of the malice you bear towards the exile? because the risk a man incurs by being engaged in a war is fearfully great. He hazards life and prosperity and can never be sure of victory.
If he come off a loser after his best endeavours, then all is over with him. The Chohánś are in no way inferior to the Musalmáns in martial bravery. The warlike Prithvíráj defeated Muhammad Ghori and drove him back to the mountains of Ghor. The bold Bisaldev committed great havoc among the Muhammadan ranks and obliged them to retrace their steps from the very gates of Ajmír. Do not expose yourself and your subjects to the risks of a war. It seems to me wise to make the figure of the exile of lace and behead it, proclaiming his execution."

The emperor became greatly incensed at these words of the Vazir.

War was proclaimed. Egypt, Kabul, Ghazní, Kandahár, Khorásán, Rúm, Arabia, Káshmír, Irán, Turán and Habesh (Abyssinia) poured forth each its quota of soldiers. There was a vast sea of spears, swords, muskets, shields, bows and arrows, all glittering in the sun on the broad plain of Dehli. The emperor could not help laughing at the rashness of Hamír, seeing before him, as far as his eyesight could reach, the unending line of the soldiers who were drawn up in battle-array, with streaming banners, at the call of the muster-rolls. There stood before him, bending their heads, Lodís, Pátháns, Goháns, Burdwans, Sarunís, Khorásánís, Khayam Kháníís, Syáds, Mugháls, Adamkhorís, Chustís and Scindhís, all numbering 4,510,000 troops, horse, foot, artillery and archers.

"How foolish is Hamír," exclaimed Alá-uddín, casting his eyes from one flank to the other, "how foolish is he to persist in his unwise resolution. He, the butterfly of a day, flutters about the strongest of fires and knows not that after a few minutes he is to fall on it with his wings singed, his beauty gone, his pride crushed, and above all his life sacrificed to imprudence. Independently of the troops of my allies, so numerous in number and obedient to my call, my tributary and dependent chiefs of Surát, Girí Nagar and of all the provinces to the south and east of my wide dominions are ready to give up their lives and interests for the sake of me, their sole monarch. 13,088 Omráos come from all parts of my empire to the imperial court, twice a year, once on Chandtíj (a festival) of Bhá- dun (August) and once in Chait (March). They prostrate themselves at my feet and remain in that position, till I bid them hold up their heads. My power is acknowledged far and wide, my authority undisputed, my heroism unparalleled, my pride and glory unbroken, and courage almost divine. I will, first of all, break down the ten walls of the fort of Ranthambor, make defence impossible, and then burn Hamír with his wives and children in the very fire which his obstinacy alone has kindled to such an extent."

Alá-uddín set out with his immense army in the month of Chait. Thick columns of dust rose high up in the air and hid the sun. When his legions began to advance, it seemed as if an ocean, having left its boundary, rolled on, sweeping everything before it with great fury. The cavalry, consisted of 27,00,000 of excellent horsemen, of whom 700,000 were Hindús. There were 10,000 messengers of war, 400,000 of pioneers, 100,000 of writers, 200,000 of merchants, 400,000 of female cooks, 200,000 of mules laden with treasure, 400,000 of grooms and 100,000 of mendicants, 200,000 of artillerymen, very able and powerful in the art of destruction, and 300,000 of camels, loaded with tents, furniture and powder bags. 5000 elephants, one exceeding the other in strength, followed the camp. They seemed as if the dark clouds of the rainy season advanced roaring and thundering in their way.

Drums and trumpets sent forth their warlike peals and stirred up spirit and enthusiasm in every heart. 'Alí Khán headed the van of the army, and Himmat Bahádur the rear. 3000 banners were unfurled. A space of more than eighty miles was taken up by these innumerable hosts, so that at every halt the pioneers had to clear such an extent of land of dense forests. All wells and tanks which they happened to pass by were drained, many a narrow valley was blown up and extended.

The report of the expedition of Alá-uddin reached the territory of Hamír. Many cowardly Bhumíáś (petty chiefs) fled, leaving their possessions, to live amidst defiles and winding caves of mountains, whereas heroes, nobles and soldiers made themselves ready for battle. There was a hill-fort named Málarná from which descended a body of brave Rájpúts. They took by surprise a detachment of Muhammadan troops encamped below in fancied security. 10,000 soldiers of the Sháh of Kablánúr were cut off, and the camp pillaged.

When the intelligence of this event reached the emperor, he ordered his soldiers to pursue the plunderers closely. They succeeded in overtaking them on the bank of the Baná. A party of 20,000 Ráwats, headed by five heroes—Puañír Abhay Singh, Ráţţor Bharji, Bagel Hari Singh, Katchwá Bhum Singh and Chohán Sardúl—hastened to the aid of the pursued even without taking the orders of their liege-lord Hamír. The imperial tents arrived there and had to halt for two days.

A detachment of troops, commanded by Himmat Bahádur, came forward. They were met by a body of Rájpút soldiers under Hari Singh Bāgelá and Bhum Singh Katchwá. 'Alí Khán, at the head of 200,000 soldiers, joined his brother Himmat's ranks. The Rájpút warriors, although surrounded on every side by the masses of the Muhammadan army, pressed on and began to fight. Very great was the skill displayed by them. Now they applied arrows to their bows, now they shot them, pulling the strings up to their ears. Engaged in battle, they seemed as if the great Arjun was again fighting in the field of Kurukshetra. There was a play of swords for hours. The blood of the slain rained as showers of the rainy season. The armours were cut, and bodies divided into two parts. Many spearmen danced with fury, stabbing all that fell in their way. The sharp points of lances, seen on the backs of the dead, were as horns of the moon peeping through dark clouds. Many heads were cut off; but lo! the bodies rose with swords in their hands and made havoc among the hostile ranks. Daggers went right through the bellies, the wide battle-axes opened large wounds in the chests, whence flowed jets of blood in torrents as pour down streams of water besoiled with red clay from the tops of mountains. Many a wounded man flew with wild fury at his nearest adversary, killed him and then fell down dead on his body. At last the Muhammadans, panic-struck, ran away in confusion. Many bewailed their lot, and there rose a cry of despair.

The victorious Rájpúts carried off immense booty, consisting mostly of treasure. The loss on the Muhammadan side was 30,000 foot, 20 elephants, and 2000 horse. The number of the wounded could not be counted. On the Rájpút side, there fell 16 warriors only, and 30 were wounded, among whom was Puáiir Abhay Singh who had received a slight injury on his head.

Having defeated the Muhammadans, the Rájpút warriors went to Ranthambor and bowed their heads before Hamír. Then they informed him of all the events as they had happened. He ordered them in a firm tone not to fight any more battles with the emperor while he was on the way.

The Vazir Mihram Khán said to Alá-uddín: “Imperial Master, the territories of Hamír are very mountainous, and therefore difficult of subjugation. See a body of plunderers and thieves descended on us from hill-tops and declivities and went away, having pillaged our goods. So it behoves our troops to be very cautious, and always on their guard.”

Alá-uddín’s tents were pitched outside the hills of Ranthambor. Mirs, Amirs, Kháns and others arrived there, not without scruples and were encamped by the side of wells and tanks all round the town.

Chapter VI.

Seated on his hill-fort, which commanded the view of many a mile, Hamír saw the grandeur of the imperial camp. He remarked, laughing, “Lo! Alá-uddín has come, a gipsy at the head of numerous flocks. He, with all his pride and parade, shall never be able to stand the first shock which my chiefs and I will give him and his troops. The Mlechchas (infidels) of all the ten quarters of the world have accompanied him; but I will disperse them as flakes of cotton in the air, and this I resolve to do very soon. If it please God to determine otherwise, I am sure to cause wholesale massacre in the second battle.”

Hamir's letter to Ala-uddin.—"Emperor, arm yourself with two bows and ten arrows. War is to be waged between you and me. Why close the roads to travellers? Do not molest them. When you have come to Ranthambor, you will very shortly see how strong are our forces in an open battle-field.”

Ala-uddin's reply.—"Do not think me, Hindá, a common person: I am one inspired from heaven, and gifted with the sovereignty of Dehli. The ways of the Hindús and those of the Musalmáns are different, and it is my avowed object to make them follow one—the only way of truth. Four devils and eighty-four saints are at my service, waiting only for my sovereign command. You have given refuge to Muhammad Sháh, and do you venture to hope for life? Yet consider. What profit do you hope to get by keeping a culprit with you? Know that the issue of your stubbornness will be the destruction of lacs and millions of men. Then why not leave one, if your leaving him would make the aspect of things look bright?"

Hamir's letter.—"O Emperor, you have never heard of the virtues of the Kshatriyás. As you are a saint of Mecca, so am I a hero of heaven. Between you and me there is no resemblance, and this I have told you often. I will never break my promise, which I have resolved to keep after a careful consideration of all circumstances. I will never violate it. Our fort was founded by Siva for the defence of the oppressed and the glorification of truth and Rájpút power. Why care for your body which is frail and transient at best? Where lies the use of living an inglorious life? The anchorets never give up spiritual meditation and abstraction of their minds for things worldly and, therefore, corrupt. The Rájpúts never give up their hereditary virtues. I will never return you the exile Muhammad Sháh, until my head be severed from my body. The Choháns and the Muhammadans have been and are often at war with one another. Prithvíráj slew the saints Miran and Kväjá with their 180,000 men. The great Ajaípál had paramount power. Bisaldev brought many a monarch to his feet. Biramdev Sangráná made a great havoc among the Muhammadan ranks at Jhálwárgárh; he never consented to give his handsome daughter in marriage with an emperor and thus preserved, in spite of great difficulties and temptations, the honour of his house inviolate. Prithvíráj drove away Muhammad Ghori seven times to the mountains of Ghor, after having subjected him to the ignominy of wearing women's bracelets (churí) on his arms. When the latter again attacked Dehli, the brave Chohán died exulting on the field. You, weak in intellect, do you think that the truthful Rájpáts will be deterred by adverse circumstances from doing what they consider to be their duty? Do you think that they fear death and destruction? Never give place to such a thought. I am a descendant of the heroic Choháns. Rather than live to see my words fall to the ground, I will die a glorious death with my sword drawn on my bosom. I have determined and made it a point in my life never to leave undone what I am resolved upon. I will never go to you and bow down at your feet with proposals of peace, it matters not with how many furies you may be attended. If the Šesh leave supporting the earth on its broad head, if the mountains leave their fixed places and begin to move, if the waters of the Ganges flow from her mouth to the source, if the sun rise in the West and the polar star move in the sky, if the ocean violate the truth by which he his bound to keep confined within his dominions, if the satí who burned herself with the body of her husband rise from her ashes and begin to live together again in the world, then and yet then I will never break through my resolution. The sky may not bear myriads of stars on its broad bosom, and the beams of the morning sun hide them from the face of the earth, yet Hamír, brave Hamír, will never violate his sacred promise. I assure you, I will never let any one, be he the strongest of all mortals—a saint or a demon—to pull a hair out of Muhammad Sháh’s head as long as I am alive.

“Do not forget, Emperor, the truth I point out to you—that lace of Alá-uddins have been turned to dust on the surface of this frail earth. Do you think yourself the only hero? Never for a moment give place to such a thought. Nothing has been, and will ever be, stable on earth. Do not blow your own trumpet, Alá-uddin. If it has pleased God to make you a monarch, you are one, and who calls you a slave? Who knows what will be your condition in the fort of Ranthambor?”

Chapter VII.

Hamír came to the temple of Mahádeva, worshipped the god in various ways, burnt incense and thus prayed:—

“I bow down at thy feet, thou Omnipotent, thou wearer of matted hair, holder of the píndak spear. O thou, that hast three eyes and fire burning and the moon shining on thy forehead; that hast a garland of human heads around thy neck; that hast Bhavání on thy left side, and the Ganges murmuring on thy head, hid amidst the knots of thy hair; that hast Gaurí as a part of the body, and devils and serpents attending thee—O thou whose throat is blue with poison, whose son is Ganeśa and servant Bhrábhadra, O thou mighty lord, have mercy on me, help me in this dire extremity and make me fearless now, when Alá-uddín has come at the head of 270,000 horse to fall on me and conquer my fort. I depend only on thy mercy. The sinner has his sins forgiven him by thy benign power. I have come to thee to ask thy protection. Defend the fort; defend truth and the glory of the Rájput virtues. O thou, the lord of Umá, bless me, help me, support me and encourage me. The fort is being drowned and swept away by the mighty ocean of the Muhammadan army. Keep the honour of my words inviolate. O god, assist me that thy name may be glorified here on earth." Then Hamír closed his eyes and became lost in contemplation.

The heavens opened and a sound issued—"Hear, son, the glory of thy deeds shall remain untarnished for ever. Fight the Muhammadan forces: thou hast nothing to fear, even if the siege last for 14 years. On Saturday the eleventh after the full-moon in the month of July (the moon being on the sign Pushyá), there shall be a great final massacre. Thy name and heroism shall be immortal both here and hereafter. Draw thy sword for the glory of thy words, because such is the virtue of the Kshatriyas."

With great joy Hamír prostrated himself at the feet of the god. He was coming out of the temple, when he heard the following words: "Hear, Ráo, this is certain—if a thousand warriors of thy ranks fall on the field, they shall fall killing a lac of the infidels."

Hamír called a council of war. His friends and ministers all assembled. There were present warriors, heroes, Ráwats and formidable Bhárs—men who regarded their lives as pawned for the safety and cause of their liege-lord. They were not given to sensual pleasures, and, therefore, their limbs were as strong and hard as rocks. The world and the flesh had no influence on their minds. Their lips dropped honey, and they were ready to cut off their own heads for the interest of others. Their glory and heroism were sung by the minstrels. They held jagirs which gave to each of them an annual yield, worth a lac of Rupees. Ráo Randhir of the fort of Chhan, uncle to Hamír, was at the head of these heroes. He, having bowed to the Ráo, thus spoke, "Hamír, see my dexterity in using swords. I shall do what our uncle Kan did when he fought with the Kámdháj Ráťors of Kanauj." "Listen to what I say, my valiant uncle," replied the Ráo, "your heroism is not unknown to me. You are the defender of my fort, fort-wall, town, my forces and all that I have in my possession. Hear, I have said to the emperor, that I shall fight with him in an open field of battle; see that my words do not fall to the ground."

Hamír strengthened the defences of the fort. Large cannons were mounted on the bastions; soldiers armed with bows and arrows were seated beside the battlements. The gates were well guarded by very powerful sentinels. Every pass, every entrance, every gap was very carefully shut up, and defended by bodies of strong heroes. Then marched the great Chohán, riding on an elephant, followed by many other warriors armed cop à pied each seated on his own charger. The elephants were so tall that the heads of their riders touched the sky. Such an impetuous rush they made, that it seemed as if a host of devils ran forward to fight, having been awakened from sleep. Then followed bodies of horses all brisk and fleet, well-dressed and mailed. Young and powerful heroes rode on them and began to pour down in parties. The head of the mighty Randhir was seen prominent among the Rájput ranks. The valleys rang with the loud and thrilling sounds of trumpets and drums. Randhir, with his warriors, pressed on. The large number of horses and elephants, coming forward, looked as if the waters of an ocean rolled on sweeping everything before them.

Alá-uddin, on seeing the hostile troops before him, drawn up in battle-array, ordered, in great anger, to besiege the fort very closely. The Rájput forces and the ranks of the Muhammadans met. Many a hero rushed hither and thither, uttering shouts of war-cries at the top of his voice. Arrows flew whizzing through the air and pierced the massive bodies of elephants, as pass numbers of enraged serpents to their dens on the sides of mountains.

There was a sharp play of swords held in determined hands. Randhir rode out in front, brandishing his steel very cleverly. Azmat Khán and Muhammad Ali, at the head of 80,000 veteran soldiers, fell upon him. The engagement was very fearful and lasted steadily for a long time. "Hold fast your bows, Muhammadan," cried out Randhir. Muhammad Ali rushed at him, furious like a tiger. While both the heroes were engaged, Azmat Khán bent his bow and shot an arrow at the breast of the Chohán, who, slightly hurt, thrust his lance on the former so cleverly that it went right through his head, and down dropped the body on the ground. "Think not, Chohán, that thou hast won the victory" exclaimed Muhammad Ali, "I shall show thee my skill in the use of swords, and the next moment thou shalt fall a prey to it." No sooner did he say the above words than his flashing sword fell on the head of Randhir. The helmet was cut off, but the wound on the head was very slight. The brave Chohán then despatched the Muhammadan by one stroke of his sword. When their brave commander fell the troops gave way. They shrank in fear. Many veterans dropped down dead on the field; sharp daggers were run through many a breast. Heads began to roll on the ground, their teeth grinding and eyes darting fire. Legs and hands were cut off, and yet the stumps fought. A panic seized the Muhammadans, and they fled away in confusion. The total loss on the Muhammadan side was a very great number of soldiers, besides Muhammad Ali and Azmat Khán, Mírs of the
When the troops fled away from the field, when "Fly away for life" was the only expression heard, the emperor burst with anger. He said "Fy! Fy! cowards, why do you leave the field? Is it for this act of shame that I allowed you the enjoyment of many comforts? Is it for this that you have eaten my salt? Now the love of life overcomes faithfulness. Come, come along to me, I shall cut you to pieces with my own hand." The scattered soldiers became united, and again they rushed to the field. Their shouts were heard to a great distance. Bádat Khán, the principal Mír of Ghazni, bowed down to Alá-uddín. He said, "See my dexterity and military talents, Royal Master, see how I fight and kill the hostile troops one and all."

Bádat came to the field with great fury; so great were his bravery and ferocity that it seemed as if the fire of death and destruction shone forth from every pore of his body. The air resounded with the high peal of drums. Colours were unfurled. Clad in mail and armed with all the weapons of attack and defence, the Muhammadan Mír thought himself invulnerable. The enraged emperor gave orders, and a second battle was fought. Again the martial music of sándhis (pipes), trumpets and drums was sounded; shouts and cheers were heard from all sides. Cannons roared, and thereby the earth shook, the waters of tanks and wells became dry, and women miscarried. Arrows flew fast in large numbers. Darkness spread over the field, so that the hands of the archers could neither be seen nor distinguished. Bádat Khán and Randhir met. They seemed as if two mighty Rudras came face to face. The Muhammadan was at the head of 20,000 soldiers who surrounded the Rájpút. The troops of the latter rode forward. Swords clashed, and the Chohán warriors, by a masterly feat of arms, failed not in cutting the bodies of their adversaries in ten thousand pieces. There was a play of sharp spears. The heroic Randhir commenced a wholesale massacre, and almost all the Muhammadans were put to the sword. With a wild hurrah, out rushed Bádat Khán and fell on the great Chohán. He raised a guraz (a club with a ball of steel at one end) on the head of his enemy, who shifting wisely warded off the blow by his shield. Then Randhir, furious with rage, struck Bádat Khán dead by one stroke of his sword. The head dropped down, but behold! the body rose and rushed at the Ráo, who immediately divided it into two equal parts.

The emperor became greatly sorry at the fall of Bádat Khán and that of his 20,000 men. Mihram Khán having joined his hands, thus spoke:
"Did I not tell you, that Hamír will never come to you and return you the exile, Muhammad Sháh. When he has drawn his sword against you, he will stand by his resolution; you can never get the body of the refugee. The promise of that greatest of all heroes is true, and true to the letter."

Álá-uddín became greatly displeased with the Vazir. He said "Cursed coward, do you not know my might? Do you not know that in the twinkling of an eye, I can destroy the fort of your valiant Ráo, burn him, his sons and wives, and bring the exile Muhammad Sháh trembling to my feet?" Taking a copy of the Korán in his hand, he bowed down to the great Álá. He cast his eyes from one flank to the other of the numerous host arranged on his side. Then with a secret pride he gave vent to his thoughts—"The lines of my forces are as thick and dense as dark clouds on the autumnal sky. Hamír, foolish Hamír, can expect to live only a day or two more."

The Vazir's reply.—"O Emperor, who on earth can have even a slight glimpse of futurity? A stubborn insect persistently flitters about the strongest fire, although it falls singed on the flame."

In the camp of Hamír, Randhír said,—"The emperor has come to Ranthambor, having conquered the four sides of the earth. It behoves us, therefore, to fight both day and night."

Hamír.—"Mighty uncle, at night how shall I be able to distinguish heroes from cowards? Besides, the principal virtue of the Kshatriyas lies in fighting in the presence of Súrya (the sun), Bhairav, Mahádeva, and Káliká; and the vultures do not come to the field but in day-light. I will never fight the Muhammadan forces at night, because I consider it a deception."

Two thousand large cannons were kept steadily engaged in pouring out volleys of fire towards the fort. The fearless Hamír sallied forth from his hills and committed dreadful massacre by day, while by night descended the troops of Randhír all of a sudden from the defiles and declivities of the mountains of Chán, and brought certain destruction on the Muhammadan ranks. Thus did the two heroes cut off the heads of many Mirs and Amírs and those of many horses and elephants. The blood of the slain flowed as rivers. Ah! what a terrible sight it was to look upon.

Álá-uddín, seeing the hopeless state of things, is said to have invoked the saint Khwájá of Ajmír and the saint Mirán of Tárágarh in the following words: "I will go barefooted to your shrines, mighty Pirás, if you deliver the fort of Ranthambor into my hands." The latter sent nine Sayyáds to his assistance. They cut off their own heads and holding them by their hands made a desperate rush at Hamír, when lo! four gods descended from heaven—Gaṇanāth, Sambhu, Dinakar and Khethrapāl. There followed a violent contest between them. Exulting and angry, they sprang on the heads of each other. Now they roared, now darkness covered the face of the earth making everything look terrible, now it rained very fast, now they rode on the clouds and exchanged angry words with one another. Now they poured down fire, now they hurled each his enemy into the air. Now the earth shook with their fury. Gaṇanāth wielded his pināk with great skill, and Bhairav his mudgar. The Pīrs fell. Their bodies remained on the earth while their souls were put into prison. Here are their names: Abdāl, Hassein, Rahīm, Sultān Mekki, Abul Hākāni, Rassul, Jakhki Ali, Hayar and Himmat. Alā-uddin drew a heavy sigh at the sight of their bodies strangled and scattered in a forest. In a desponding tone he remarked: “Victory belongs to Hamīr, alas! not to the great follower of the crescent.”

Then the emperor called a council of war. The Vazir Mihrām Khān thus addressed his Imperial Majesty: “Nothing now can be of any avail but one thing. Let us besiege Chhan. If the fort of Randhir fall, we shall succeed in creating a panic in that of Ranthambor. Rāo Randhir will come to you with the Sheik, and thus will the pride of Hamīr fall to the ground.”

Emperor.—“Then let us carry the fort Chhan at once.” A purwanna was instantly written to Rāo Randhir.

Firman.—“Rāo, the emperor, being angry with you at your haughty conduct, has determined to besiege your fort. Take care and be humble, for his 5000 Arabic cannons are so strong that they, when fired, can split up huge mountains to pieces. Once fire flowed from their mouths as rain from clouds, at whose fearful report the lions fled from their dens in dismay. Alā-uddin the Great, with his 250,000 horse, comes in full parade to justly punish you for your pride.”

Reply of Randhir.—“Do not delay, Emperor, in besieging my fort, now that your repeated efforts to take that of Ranthambor, which you boasted to capture within the shortest possible period, have gone for nothing. Be patient, Alā-uddin, I will fight with you bravely in an open field. Has India no heroes? Are her brave sons all gone that you are so over-bearing and vaunting? I have made every preparation for war. My soldiers are singing in sweet notes the marching song. Of my 31,000 troops, 10,000 heroes, gay like flowers, are promenading in the battle-field. They can defeat and scatter the forces of their enemy, being safe themselves.”

The imperial troops were encamped on the plains of Chhan.

Then sallied forth the Chohān troops from the hill-tops of Chhan, headed by the warlike Randhir. On the Muhammadan side Abdul Khān and Karim Khán were made commanders of the battle. Both the parties met. Showers of arrows fell, swords clashed, and rings were flung. Very great was the bravery displayed by the 10,000 heroes of the Chohán chief. The heads of 10,000 Habshis rolled on the ground. 500 Rájput warriors were slain, on whose bodies sat vultures and jackals and feasted on their flesh and blood. Then, swift like a flash of lightning, Randhir, like a hungry lion, fell upon both the commanders and cut off their heads with great dexterity. A massacre ensued. The imperial troops were driven four miles behind. "Behold, emperor," exclaimed the Ráo, "see how your brave soldiers fly away. Pity their poor souls! Why do you number their days by pushing them on to the great furnace of Rájput might?"

Randhir's letter to Alá-uddín.—"Why delay, emperor, in taking my fort? The few days, in which you said you would capture it, have passed away. Why do you not raise my fort? Shall you ever be able to do so? No, never. Why then sacrifice the lives of your poor soldiers? Though you should besiege my fort for five years, you would not succeed in pulling a stone out of it, nor out of Hamir's, if the siege were to last for twelve years."

Although an enemy, Alá-uddín could not forbear commending the military talents and prowess of Randhir. He said "Glory to Randhir, glory to his bravery. See, amidst a forest of our men, he, at the head of a few troops, rushed in and darted like lightning, carrying the palm. Let us no more fight with swords except in special cases, for in the use of swords the Rájputs have, I am inclined to believe, no equal. Let us try to blow up the fort by planting batteries all around."

The Rájput officers and soldiers, with one voice, said to Randhir, "Continue fighting, invincible master, we will never show the enemy our backs. Fight without fear, trusting in our faithfulness. We shall die glorying in our death, thereby glorifying the name of the Choháns, and thus ascend that world of felicity which is far above the earth and the sun."

At the instance of Ráo Randhir, Ráo Hamír called together the Kshatriyas of thirty-six different clans. The troops assembled and seemed as numerous as clouds which overcast the sky. They stood in front, with their hands joined, and were thus addressed "Listen, ye friends, listen with attention; since we have drawn our swords against the emperor of India, we shall fight to the last drop of our blood. Come and side with us, ye who are brave, who dare sacrifice their lives for our sake. Let him who fears to die go away from our ranks."

The vassals replied—"Royal Master, we have eaten your salt, and shall eat it as long as we live. How can we in this extremity leave your cause?"
We promise that we will not only defend the fort, but with hearts undaunted meet the emperor, your enemy, in an open field. However great may be the odds in his favour, we will cut his men to pieces and scatter them in flight."

Flames of fire burst forth from every hill-top, and illuminated the country to a great distance.

On the receipt of Hamír's letter, the two princes of Chitor, Khán and Balansí, proclaimed the fact of their going to Ranthambor, at which all the citizens, male and female, came and fell down at their feet, beseeching them to change their resolution, and not to sacrifice their interests for those of their uncle—Hamír. The princes replied—"Listen, ye citizens, those who are born must die, for it is so ordained by God. In this corrupt age none are immortal, and none will ever be so. If we fall in battle, we shall die in glory, and our praises will be sung by the immortal Urvasí, the fairy-queen of heaven." The Ráonis, their mothers, looked pale, but they would not yield. Having saluted their superiors, they, with 3,000 brave Ráṭtors, 5,000 Puañrs and 8,000 Choháns, marched for Ranthambor. When they arrived, they encamped below the hills. Then they went to the fort.

Hamír gave the princes a very warm reception, embracing them tenderly. Great rejoicings were made in honour of their coming to Ranthambor. "I leave the burden of government upon you, princes," said Hamír, "take it. I leave all in your charge." "Glory to you, uncle," replied they, "for keeping the houseless under the shadow of your protection. You have thereby become famous in this world. None are to live for ever here below, but deeds, glorious deeds, are lasting monuments of men's lives. Our bodies are frail. As long as we, your slaves, are alive you need not go yourself to the field. We must fight the imperial legion and show you our skill in the art of war."

Both the brothers stood up in great excitement. Bravery and courage beamed forth from their faces, which looked like two rising suns. Their helmets and breast-plates glittered, and the spirit-stirring peal of trumpets made them restless.

"Brother Khán," exclaimed Balansí, "let us take the Muhammadans unawares, swoop down upon them at once, and cut them to pieces. We are resolved to die gloriously on the field. Ratan shall reign on the thrones of Chitor, Narwál and Gwáliar. (To Hamír), If the provisions of food fail, care not at all, uncle, for your life; go, fight the Muhammadans, commit a massacre and fall on the field of glory, but never break your word." The bold words of the princes made the heroic Ráo weep at the thought of parting with them, alas! for ever.

Princes.—"Nothing is stable in the world, nay, not even the mountains, the earth and the hills. Why weep at the thought of parting, dear uncle? If we be separated from you, we are sure to meet you in yonder heaven.'"

The Ráo kept quiet. The two brave heroes went to the females' apartments. They bowed to Rájí Asá. All the females, including the maids of the princess burst, out a-crying. "It is time now, dear sons," said Asá with tears rolling down her cheeks, "when we shall rejoice to see you married." The princes laughed. They cried. "Then fasten on our heads the marriage-crowns, gracious queen, and we shall fight with greater determination." The crowns were tied to their foreheads, and holy threads wound round their arms. Then she blessed them.

Afterwards the princes entered the temple of Śiva. They worshiped the god and his son Gaṇeṣa; prayed to them and touched their feet.

When they returned from the temple, drums were beaten and colours unfurled. The earth and heaven echoed. They then went to the Ráo, touched his feet, and exclaimed, "We shall meet you, dear uncle, no more here on earth, but surely there in heaven. We shall die, certainly die, but never be false to the virtues of our clan. Better far to give up the love of life and kingdom, home and children, than to violate the honour of one's own words. Farewell, Chitor, farewell ye hills and fort of Ranthambor, farewell this world of woe; welcome victory, welcome glorious death, and welcome eternal life and happiness.'"

The princes and their train descended from the hill-fort. The beauty of the Rájpút shone forth; and their spears glistened in the sun. Energy was visible on every countenance. The god Śiva forgot his contemplation, and broke out into a wild fit of laughter. Many a handsome nymph and frightful Togini (she-devil) descended from the air to follow the troops. Vultures and other birds, which feed on flesh, hovered along in thick numbers. Many a devil, who dwelt on land and air, moved forward to assemble there. The gods alighted for the protection of the princes and remained with them unseen and unknown. The procession came to their encampment. Drums gave the warning that within a few minutes there would be fought a terrible engagement.

Emperor.—"What rejoicings are being made in the hill-fort?"

Vazir.—"Two young princes, sons of Hamír's younger brother, have come to fight with us. They are strong-limbed, fully armed, blood-thirsty and desperate. Both wear crowns of victory on their foreheads."

Emperor.—"Then those of our ranks who can fight with a lion can venture to meet the princes face to face."

Vazir.—"On our side the Mírs of Arabia are unequalled in bravery and other martial talents. Their teeth are like those of a monkey, eyes like cats, bodies like monsters, and ears like a winnowing fan. Their ancestors captured Prithviráj and took him to Ghazni. They can easily seize the young princes and bring them to your feet."

The emperor thanked the Vazir for his valuable advice. Instantly he sent for Mír Znamá Khán.

Emperor.—"Brave Mír, I leave the present work entirely with you. Your ancestors imprisoned the great Prithviráj Chohán. So go you to the Rájpút ranks and capture the two princes of Chaturang, newly come to the assistance of Hamír; but see you do not kill them."

Mír Znamá Khán twisted his whiskers, touched the feet of the emperor and said, "Gracious Majesty, the work you have been pleased to give me is beneath my dignity as a warrior. What a trifle is to me the capture of two young boys. I can bring all the Hindús pinioned to your feet, cut all in pieces if they venture to make head against me, and level their bodies in the dust." He bowed before Alá-uddín.

The Rájpúts and the Muhammadans marched in great excitement. They came face to face. Then all of a sudden, like a flash of lightning, out rushed the Mír of Arabia. On both sides the warlike peal of martial music stirred up all to action. The blue and the white colours were unfurled. There was a clashing of swords for hours. The battle raged very furiously. A steady fire of matchlocks was kept up. There was also a brisk play of lances. The bold, warlike spearsmen managed their spears with so great skill that every one of them stabbed two soldiers with one stroke of his weapon. Never did a sword fail in cutting the head, upon which it had been struck, clean out of the shoulders. A wild laughter separated the lips of the goddess Kálí. There was a continuous raining of heads. Here fell a hand, there an arm, here some fingers, there some palms, here dropped the head, there with vehemence rose the body of many a warrior. Then with a shout, which thrilled every heart, out rushed Znamá the Mír of Arabia, while from the Rájpút side rode forth the prince Kánh to meet him. The Muhammadan shot an arrow which pierced the horse of the Rájpút. The horse dropped dead, and instantly a second horse was mounted. The fighting continued with unabated fury. Kánh drove a lance into the body of his adversary, who for a moment fell senseless on the ground. With redoubled energy and violence the Muhammadan was on his legs again. The brave feats of arms of both the warriors were seen with admiration by the troops of both sides. At last the wise Hamír, thinking that the old Muhammadan was more than a match for the young Hindús, called Saukhidhar. "Go you, Saukhidhar, the bravest of all heroes, skilful in the art of war, go at once to the field to aid the Chitor princes. They are very heroic, but very young, and their antagonist is a monster in human shape. It is written that the woman, who, having determined to be burned alive with the body of her husband, shrinks back in fear at the sight of fire, is condemned in this world and loses her place in heaven. You know that nothing is immortal but the soul. You are wise, and so I need not instruct you in these well known rules. Glorious are they who conquer both this world and the world to come. Your mother bore in you a hero; think of these things and fight. Go with all speed to the field and assist the young princes.''

With a wild hurrah rode forth Saukhddhar as swiftly as an arrow. The troops of Zamál Khán were also reinforced by a body of 200,000 Arabian soldiers. Cannons boomed, and balls rushed out, uplifting many a horse and elephant in the air. Swords clashed, and heroes hollood. Heads dropped on the muddy earth, muddy by the incessant shedding of blood.

"Fight, fight my brave soldiers," exclaimed Kánh at the top of his voice, "fight the Muhummadans, and be glorious; fight to the last drop of your blood that your name may be noised here below, and salvation won there above. See, none is able to live for ever in this frail world." The prince Bálan spurred his elephant to meet Zamál Kánh. All of a sudden he struck the Mír with a sword, which cut off the helmet and wounded his head. Again a combat ensued. The dagger of Bálan went right through the heart of Zamál, who fell down dead on the ground. Then outrushed his attendants, and they succeeded in killing the prince. Kánh made a desperate rush at the enemy's line and killed all he could; but his days were also numbered. With wild fury sprang amidst the ranks the brave Saukhddhar. Many Arabsians were put to the sword, and more were stabbed. From every wound blood issued in jets and flowed in torrents. The reeking weapons flashed fire, and heads rolled hither and thither on the ground. The beheaded rose with vehemence and rushed at any that chanced to fall within their grasp. The victory belonged to the Rájpúts, and the remainder of the Arab forces fled away in confusion. Many handsome nymphs descended from heaven and carried above the two brave princes and the mighty warrior Saukhddhar. On the Rájpút side the loss was 8000 Choháns, 3000 Ráttors, and 5000 Puañrs—16,000 in all, and three great heroes; while that on the Muhammadan side was 70,000 foot, 5000 horse and elephant—75,000 in all, and Zamál Khán, the Mir of Arabia.

Ráo Randhir, with his sword drawn, spoke face to face with Alá-uddíń. "O Emperor, the time has come when my fort shall be destroyed. Hear, with attention, Hamír will never break through his resolution. Know this as truth, and nothing but truth. Consider very maturely, and then act. The fort of Ranthambor will never come into your possession. Leave your pride therefore. It behoves you to do so."
“Why not,” replied Alá-uddín, “make Hamír understand what I say? Why extend the flame of war which feeds on many Rájpúts and Muhammadans? He may reign in the territories of Ranthambor. I am not averse to that, if he will only bring the exile Muhammad Sháh to my feet; else sure as my name is Alá-uddín I will curb his pride. If I break through my resolution while Hamír is glorying in the firmness of his, I shall never be worthy the name of ‘Emperor.’ It is certain that of two contending parties one comes off the gainer. Listen, Randhír, listen to my word. I know every creek and corner of the dominions of Hamír. By whose orders has he been authorized to enjoy to this day the possession of the four forts—Ranthambor, Chitoor, Narwál and Gwáliar? He has never served me; neither has he ever so far condescended as to make me an obseisance. Mountains may move, the sun may rise in the West, and many such other unnatural things might happen, but I, mighty Alá-uddín, will never return to Delhi without the exile. If I do so, I shall be a coward and emphatically the greatest of all cowards, not worthy to sit on an imperial throne.” (Turning to his ranks), “Press hard the seige, my brave warriors, and carry the fort.”

Randhír bade farewell to the fort. He gave alms to the Brálman, bowed down his head before the sun and joined his hands as if he awaited his orders. Then, bending at the name of Hamír, he rushed forth very furiously at the head of his heroes, warriors and soldiers. His 10,000 veterans were in the front line. Then followed the horsemen, the riders upon elephants. Cannons boomed from the fort. Hurrah! hurrah! hurrah! shouted the Chohán troops. Then, swift as flashes of lightning, they fell upon the Muhammadan ranks, as fell the mighty Rághava upon the rúkshasas of Ceylon. The heroes looked ferocious in anger. Steady in fight, all of them vowed to abide by the virtues of their clans. There was a standing cannon fire from both sides. The fort and its walls were breached. On the earth it rained terrible showers of flame. Dark clouds, produced by the smoke, hung on the atmosphere. Wherever there was a circle of men, shots came in that direction.

“Come, fight with us, ye Muhammadan wrestlers, if any of you be worthy the name,” cried out the brave veterans of Randhír, elated with pride. They fell to wrestling. The battle raged, horse fought with horse, foot with foot, and elephant with elephant. There was an incessant shower of shots. Some lost their bodies, while others their heads, some their hands, while others their legs. So profound was the darkness spread over the field, that it could not be known whether it was day or night. Arrows flew fast piercing many a horse and elephant. The strong steel mail was no protection from their sharp points. Some soldiers were stabbed by the violent strokes of d daggers. From the wounds caused by them the blood flowed in torrents as from roofs the rain water flows in the month of August. Numberless heads dropped on the field and rolled like so many water-melons. The Muhammadan forces shrank back. At the brave feat of arms of Randhir, even the Emperor, although an enemy, could not forbear to exclaim, "Praise to you, praise to your valour, mighty warrior," and at the same time, looking at his dispersed troops, he frowned and then rebuked them, saying, "Why fly, ye cowards, from the field, while I am still alive?"

Then bowed down the Bakhshi of the imperial legion. "Make me the commander of the battle," said he exulting, "and I will with 100,000 Rumanians fight the Hindus and scatter them as flakes of cotton before the wind." With a drawn sword in his hand he rushed out at the command of Ala-uddin. Randhir, holding a lance, rode forward. The warriors came face to face. The Muhammadan aimed a guraz (an iron club) at the head of the Chohan. The latter warded off the blow with his massive shield. Then a lance was darted at the former. It pierced his body and that of his horse too, and the next moment he fell senseless on the field. Fifty Mirs rushed forward, but all of them met the same fate. Then came out a fierce Mir of Rúm. A fearful engagement raged. A dagger was run through his breast down to the hilt; he dropped down, and in a few minutes all his struggles subsided in the stillness of death. The sword of a Balkhan fell on the shoulder of the Ráo. The throat was cut through, but behold the body rose with vehemence. It made a rush at the murderer. It got him within its grasp and pressed him heavily. Down they dropped and instantly the dagger of the Moslim went right through his breast. 100,000 Rumanians fell. The body of the brave Chohan lay on the field like a tall palm, with blood gushing out of the neck. The Joginis (she-devils) regaled themselves with his blood, filled their cups, drained them, and danced.*

On Saturday the 9th before the full-moon in the month of Chait, 30,000 Rájpúts fell for the defence of the fort, and 10,000 women burned themselves on pyres with their husbands. The loss on the Muhammadan side was thousands of Muhammadan soldiers, including the mighty Bakhshi, who held a jagir of 5 lacs, and other officers, holding from 10 to 20,000 Rupees' worth of land.

When the intelligence of the capture of the fort of Chohan by Ala-uddin reached Hamir, he became the more resolved to fight the Musalmán forces. He exclaimed, "Glory to you, uncle, glory to your uncommon bravery. The death of a Kshatriya is both a glory and a blessing. You have done, mighty hero, what uncle Kan did for Prithvíraj at the battle..." * It was a belief among the Rájpúts that Joginis like the blood of mighty heroes.
of Kanauj." He felt glad and sorry at intervals: glad at the heroic death of his uncle, and sorry at the loss of so great an ally. He continued, "You have killed 60 elephants, 200,000 horses and 26 Amirs; glory to you for ever, invincible hero of heroes."

So numerous were the men slain and wounded in the Musalmán ranks, that it took Alá-uddín full six months to have them buried one by one.

"Imperial Majesty," said a herald to Alá-uddín, "it is said that Mahádeva, the lord of tigers, is Hamír's ally. He has blessed the brave Ráo, telling him, 'Fear not, child, your fort can never be taken, even if the siege last for fourteen years.'"

On the third day after the full-moon in the month of Asaj (September), the emperor marched to break down all the temples at Alanpur. On this, there followed a great commotion among the devils of Mahádeva. Sixty-four Joginis and fifty-four Bhairavs (he-devils), armed with tridents and khappars (cups for holding blood) danced a horrible dance. They, with Shéoji at their head, rushed at Alá-uddín, playing on deheru and singing through sankh (shells) many fearful, soul-stirring, martial airs. A Bhairav was close at the heels of the Emperor, exclaiming: "I will slay thee, wretch, knock thy head and make a grand feast of thy blood." The terrified emperor fled with haste, praying, "Defend me, Allá, defend me now that I am about to be eaten up by this dreadful monster." Then the goddess Saktí, taking her various shapes with bows, arrows, rings, swords, daggers and spears in her hands, and the gods armed with hal, mushal, ankus, mudgar, each his own weapon, fell on the Musalmán troops. 100,000 of the infidels fell. Ganeša bewildered the brains of many Kháns, Mírs and Amírs who began to cut off the heads of their friends, mistaking them for foes. All was confusion. Heaps upon heaps of dead bodies lay here and there and made the roads quite impassable. Ah! what a dreadful sight it was to look upon! Seven Mírs, being totally hopeless of victory, went away from the imperial ranks. The Emperor was struck with great astonishment at seeing the corpses of 200,000 of his forces, and those of two very able chiefs Himmat Bahádur and Ali Khán among them. He thus thought within himself— "What destroyer of gods is ever happy? We hear that Hari killed hundreds of Asurs or devils in ancient times. Man can match with man, gods with gods, and devils with devils." He called many Bráhmans very eagerly, and told them to do whatever they could in the way of appeasing the anger of the incensed gods.

He gave orders to march from Alanpur with all expedition.

Emperor.—"Although I am Hamír's enemy, I cannot but admire the way in which his men fight. They are quite at home with the sword. While many in our ranks fell, they fought very manfully, fearing none and, or a History of Hamír, prince of Ranthambor.

1879.

glorying in death. Their heroic contempt of life is the grand secret of their success."

Mihram Khán.—"Do not be sorry, Emperor, although you have come in spite of my prohibition. Be patient and do not lose heart. Press hard the siege. Hamír shall no more be able to hold out."

Chapter VIII.

The imperial tents were removed from Alanpur and pitched on a hill at Ráng. Having taken a view of the fort of Ranthambor through a telescope, the emperor consulted his vassals and ministers, and sent a herald to Hamír. He said, "Tell, herald, tell Hamír to deliver into my hands the exile Muhammad Sháh and to come and fall down at my feet."

When the Ráo heard this message his blood boiled. He replied, "I care not at all for your words, Emperor, I care not for them. Hamír is not a child, that threats and flatteries can move him even an inch from his resolution. So far from giving you back the Sheik Muhammad Sháh, I will not give you even any of the birds and beasts of Ranthambor. The heads of such valiant heroes as Baldev, Ranjít and Randhir Singh have I sacrificed on the field. What! to give you back our refugee. Did you not feel ashamed to write me the firman?" (To the herald.) "Go and give the emperor what I have written, and come no more even if you be ordered to do so by your master. Take as much gold as you wish for. Tell Alá-uddín that he is my enemy, and not a friend, and so where is the use of such a firman. Tell him that I will never, never deliver into his hands his exile Muhammad Sháh. Tell him that I have resolved never to meet him but on the bloody field of battle."

"How foolish is Hamír," remarked Alá-uddín, when he was informed of all particulars by the herald. According to the advice of the Vazir Mehram Khán, he secured the possession of the hill of Ráng. Large cannons were mounted upon it, and their mouths directed towards the fort. "Let us blow up the cannon which lies yonder on a bastion of the fort," said the emperor to his Vazir.

A monstrous cannon was fired, but the Ráo's cannon could not be silenced. When Hamír heard this intelligence, he ran forward to the cannon. He saw it perfectly safe. "Is there any one among my cannoniers who can burst the largest cannon mounted on Ráng! If any, I shall reward him amply and make him very rich." One stepped forward, and, having bowed to the Ráo, fired his cannon, and the next moment the imperial cannon was broken to pieces.

Emperor.—"What means are to be taken now for the capture of the fort?"
Mihram Khán.—"Hear, your Majesty, there is a tank outside the walls of the fort which, if bridged over, can give a passage direct to the fort."

Every arrangement was made for the building of a dam, and it was finished after prodigious labour.

"We can no longer defend the fort" said Hamír drawing a heavy sigh. "It is lost, alas! the dear fort of my father is lost." In the dead of the night Padam Ságár in the guise of a man appeared to him in his dreams. "Do not be sorry, my bold son," said he "my waters are fed by springs issuing forth from 7 oceans and 900 rivers. Be sure I will overflow the dam with the greatest expedition. Be happy and live secure within your fort." At break of day, Hamír saw to his astonishment a vast sheet of water rolling over the site of the erected dam. The emperor felt greatly disheartened. He said in despair: "Alas, the fort baffles all our attempts."

Great rejoicings were held within the fort. There was dancing in the darbár of Hamír. Chandralálá, a fascinating dancing-girl, the harmonious mridang, bina (flutes), shitar sándiyi, khajuri, kartal, srimúdal, sur, jaltarang and such other musical instruments were bewitching the heart of every one of the audience. Chandralálá had perfect knowledge of 6 Rágas and 36 Ráginis. The following airs were being sung. (Here follow a list of the tunes which we omit.) The Ráo was sitting in state reclining on his pillow, and ekamars were being fanned about him.

When Alá-uddín saw this pomp and splendour of Hamír, his heart was cut to the core. He said "Lo! Hamír is enjoying pleasures like the rich Indra of heaven. He does not break through his resolution and meet with me, neither does he give me the Sheik, nor understand the consequences of his inveterate pride. See, how he laughs with the dancing-girl who darts quick glances at him, while she cares not at all for me. When the music calls her for dancing, she bows her head to the Ráo, while she shows her heels to me. She insults me very greatly. See, how she laughs and makes her feet as if she would kick me. Is there any one among my archers who, by shooting her, could curb her pride and that of her master? I would give a very handsome prize to that hero." Mír Gabrú joined his hands and prayed, "It is not becoming for heroes, oh mighty Emperor, to hurt a woman." "Do not shoot her dead, noble Mír," replied Alá-uddín "but wound her foot." Fast flew the arrow of Mír Gabrú whizzing through the air. It pierced a foot of Chandralálá and fell in the midst of the Chohán Council.

All the audience were struck dumb with surprise. Hamír looked dejected and became full of cares. "Singular!" he remarked. "How can an arrow come over such a distance? Who is the archer? a saint indeed." He looked around in confusion and was lost in astonishment. In utter hopelessness, he gasped: "How many such skilful saints are there in the ranks of Ala-uddin?" "Do not be alarmed, mighty Rao," said Muhammad Shah. "I know the archer, he is my younger brother: none amongst the troops of Ala-uddin can equal him in archery. Devotion can never be made but by a devotee, neither can heroism be displayed but by a hero. May it please you to order me, and this very moment the head of the emperor shall I pierce, sitting as I am in this place. All your troubles will be over and his troops dispersed." Hamir replied, smiling, "Never be guilty of regicide, great hero, for an emperor, whatever his merits may be, is next to God. Shoot away the state umbrella which is put up above his head." The swift-winged arrow of Muhammad Shah shot the umbrella with such a force that it fell on the ground. An Analpank's (eagle's) keen eyes mistook it (umbrella) for an elephant. The bird swooped down upon it and was disappointed.

* Padam Ságár was a large tank inside the fort of Ranthambor.

The Vazir Mihram Khan having joined his hands, said to the emperor, "Praise be to God that your life has been saved owing to the consideration of eating your salt in former years. Be sure that if the skilful archer shoot a second arrow, it will be aimed at your life. How can that fort be captured wherein lives such an expert hero? As a serpent that has caught a mole is on the two horns of a dilemma: if it swallows it, it dies, and if it vomits the part eaten, it becomes blind. Such, exactly such has been your case, imperial Majesty. I hear that the heroic Muhammad Shah asks for orders daily to shoot you dead, but the kind Hamir does not consent to do so. If he be ever given orders, he will put you in fetters, set his protector on the throne of Dehli and proclaim his rule there. It behoves you, therefore, to leave your determination and go back to the capital safe and sound, with your head on your shoulders. On the other hand, if Hamir be victorious and you fly away from here, your honour will be greatly hurt."

The disappointed emperor, although very angry, had to withdraw his camp backwards to Mullarná.

Chapter IX.

Sarjan Shah, a baniá (merchant) of the Sharaoji sect of Buddhists, made up his mind to avenge the death of his father. "The blood of my father cries out 'Vengeance,'" said he, "and so I must forthwith go to the imperial camp and by any means possible give Ala-uddin the possession of the fort." He presented five mohurs to the emperor and bowed down at his feet. He then joined his hands and thus addressed his Majesty: "I will enable you, mighty monarch, to capture the fort. Only promise to give me in return the territory of Randhir."
The emperor replied, smiling, "Come forward, dear Seth,* I will give you not only the Ráj of Randhir, but that of Hamír. I will make you a great Umriño." Sarjan took an oath by chewing a betel-leaf and attached himself privately to the cause of Alá-uddín, who removed his tents and pitched them on his former position near the fort.

The false mind of Sarjan devised a good plan. In the dead of the night, he managed with the greatest secrecy to throw dry hides into the deep under-ground stores of grain named Járá and Bhórá. At break of day he came to the darbár of Hamír and with a profound bow said to the Ráo: "My lord, we are really in a great extremity. The supply of provision has failed. The only resource now left us is to meet with the emperor and make friends with him." Hamír was at first indifferent to what he said, but when Sarjan repeatedly pressed his point, he could no longer keep his passion within bounds. His eye-balls darted fire. He roared, "Begone, vile coward, begone from my sight. Dost thou propose to shake my resolution? Understand, wretch, if I bow down my head at the feet of the emperor, my mother will be ashamed of having borne me ten months in her womb." He softened and then continued, "What is the motive of thy request? If I go to Alá-uddín with proposals of peace, my meeting with him will go hard against me and against my virtues as a Rájpút. Listen, thou fool, the basest of all mortals, mean and timid, listen; I am a Kshatriya, and if I break through my resolution, I shall no more be worthy of being called by that glorious name. How do you know that our stores are empty?"

"If it please you, lord," replied Sarjan, "to go to the stores, you will see with your own eyes the reality of what I speak." Then he took Hamír to the stores and threw stones into them. How great was the Ráo's disappointment to hear them resound. He was now convinced of the truth of Sarjan's words and could not find out that the real cause of the reverberation were the hides, thrown some hours ago by his perfidious store-keeper.

Seeing the Ráo very sad, Muhammad Sháh with joined hands, thus prayed, "Do not be sorry, my generous patron and protector. Permit me, I humbly implore you, to permit me to go to the presence of Alá-uddín. The moment he will get me, he will, I have no doubt, march back for his capital. You have given me house and have suffered so much. Do not stake your life and throne, Ráo, but reign secure in your dominions. Wherever I shall go, your praises shall be on my lips for evermore."

Hamír replied, smiling, "What on earth is stable, Sheik? How can a being endowed with reason desire for a thing which, taken at its utmost

* Seth is a title of respect given to a wealthy merchant.
length, is but frail and transient. Glorious actions outlive their doers. I have drawn my sword against Alá-uddín for the honour of my promise. Let me die a glorious death. There are many friends in prosperity, but in adversity very few. Know that the firmness of Hamír, the pride and stubbornness of Rávana, the truth of Rájá Harischandra, and the skilful archery of Arjún are unequalled in their potency, superior to the fear of death, to the love of life and kingdom. Is death to be feared when it brings an endless glory both here and hereafter? Shall I break through my resolution and thereby be meaner than the tiny chakar which picks up fire and never refrains, although its bill is burnt to ashes?"

At night-fall, Sarjan Sháh went in haste to the emperor's camp, his countenance beaming with joy. Having joined his hands and bowed down, he informed his Majesty of the success of his device. He said "The supply of grain is still large enough to last twelve years more. Now the fort is yours, its strength of position and Rájpút bravery will avail it nothing. It is yours, now, emphatically yours. May it please you to demand of Hamír (1) Chandralalá the dancing-girl, (2) Dewal Kimari (the virgin daughter of Hamír), (3) Paresh the philosopher's stone, (4) Muhammad Sháh the exile.

A firman containing the above demands was instantly written and sent to the Ráo with an order for prompt execution.

The emperor's firman made Hamír's blood boil. He wrote, "I care not at all for you, Alá-uddín. As long as Hamír's head is on his shoulders, he will never allow you to get any of your demands. Take care, villain, take care, beware of your life, otherwise you are a dead man, and the throne of Dehli is without its emperor. Send me without delay (1) Begum Chimná (the favourite queen of Alá-uddín), (2) Chintámaní (a philosopher's stone), and (3) the four devils who are at your command. Send them, for so the great Hamír demands of you."

"Where lies the truth, knave," said Alá-uddín to Sarjan Sháh on receiving Hamír's reply, "where lies the truth of thy abject flatteries?"

Sarjan.—"Wait, and you will see how things go on within the fort."

Chapter X.

Sorry and crest-fallen, Hamír went to the zenana. The princess Åsá stood up, bowed down her head, joined her hands and anxiously inquired, "What ails you, lord?" "Noble queen," said he with a heavy sigh, "our provision has fallen short. What is to be done now? what means to be taken in this dire extremity? Shall I give the Sheikh back and break my word? Alas! the very thought stings me to death." "Never do so," replied the Ráni in a firm and decided tone. "With heroism unequalled, you the great Râo, have fought for twelve years and many times driven the emperor from the wall. Who has put such a vile idea in your head? What accursed devil has got possession of you that you are uttering such base words? Understand, my lord, that the greatest glory of man lies in speaking truth and standing by it at any cost. It matters not whether his body be severed to pieces, wealth lost and brothers, sons and wife sacrificed. Know that wealth and kingdom are for a few days only, while glory lasts for ever. Fight manfully to the last and keep the glory of your word intact. See, Daśaratha was bound by a promise which he had given to his bewitching Kaikayi, and so he was obliged to banish his dearest Râma, whose separation broke his heart and he sank and at last succumbed. What is fated to be must happen, and you can never avert it. Consider, Mahâ Râo, Muhammad Shâh cannot come twice to our door, neither can Ala-uddîn twice fall on the fort. If a man fear death, is he worthy to be called a Râjpût? If you break through your resolution, your fatherland Ajmir, the seat of your heroic ancestors, will be ashamed of you. Sacrifice your throne, life and fort, but never give our refugee back."

"See, Râo where is the pious Jagdev Puaîr, who cut off his own head and offered it to his tutelary goddess? Where are the learned Vikram and Bhoj, who relieved the distress of the poor? Where is the generous Karan who used to give in charity every morning, on rising from his bed, one bhar (weight) and a quarter of gold? Where are all these monarchs? Alas! they are all gone, all swept away by the grim-looking sweeper, death. None can escape from his all-grasping hand, neither the holy sages, nor the emperors, may not even the gods. There have been many Chakravarti (paramount) râjâs on the surface of the earth, whose sway extended to the shores of oceans, but where are they? All lost in the deep abyss of time. Wealth, youth and the condition of man do not ever remain the same. The moon even is subject to change. She wanes to nothingness and again waxes to her fulness."

"You cannot leave the Sheikh, because you have promised him safety. Abide by your word and resolution and never move from it and be cowed by adverse circumstances. The final massacre, as foretold by Śiva, is at hand. Fight, fight with the Muhammadan odds, holding your sword with a more determined hand. Be regardless of your life and interests. Birth, death and union come from God. None born in this world can be immortal. That which grows must perish, is a universal law of nature which no power can annul. Nothing is stable, neither man nor tree, neither mountain nor village. You have reigned over the territory of Ranthambor as long as your virtues enabled you to do so. Where is Râo Jait, your father, who laid the foundation of the fort? Where is your grandfather Sur Singh? Where is the valiant Prithivráj who imprisoned Muhammad Gori? Think on all these things, Maha Ráo; none can undo the decree of fate. Union and separation go hand in hand.” Full of emotion she cried out, “We must now part, dear husband, we must now part from each other!”

Hamír’s reply.—“Glory to you, jewel of women, and glory to your ancestors. Is there any other woman on the face of the earth who can say such free and stimulating words? If I deliver the Sheik into the hands of Alá-uddín, it will leave a foul stigma on my race. Keep your honour inviolate, commit a massacre within the fort, and die if you see blue colours come. I have tried you and found you equal to every emergency, and fit to glorify the virtues of the Kshatriyas. You are very firm in your resolution, noble princess, and I have confidence in your words.”

“Why do you doubt, lord,” said Aśá angrily, “why do you doubt our chastity? Need I tell you that we do not look even at the face of any other man? Can we go with others and be living when your fort is taken, and you killed? Let us perish first, that you may have confidence in our chastity in your dying moments.”

Hamír.—“I do not doubt your chastity, noble queen. I know you are a flower of female virtues. Listen to my request. Wait till you see the issue of the next battle.”

Hamír gave alms to all the Bráhmans and minstrels of his town. To do honour to the virtues of the Kshatriyas, he engrossed his mind and drove away the thoughts of self-interest which bind us to the world. He felt greatly affected. He bade adieu to his wife, went to the darbár and called a council of his officers, soldiers and ministers.

“Listen, brave Chaturang,” said he, “look after Ratan Singh, now that he will be fatherless. You are wise and so I leave everything entirely to your discretion. Keep under your protection my servants and others who will go to you, strengthen the fort of Chitor and rule over your rác with a golden sceptre. The virtues of a king are specially four—forbearance, courage, scrutiny and justice. Follow them, because none can be a good ruler without them.”

Chaturang.—“I will never leave you, Rác; if you live, I will live; if you die the death of glory, why am I to be deprived of it?”

Hamír.—“Your life is specially necessary, Chaturang. See, where will our subjects go to, when they shall be, as a matter of course, oppressed by the Muhammadans? To Chitor certainly. There will the inhabitants of Ranthambor flee to live in peace and plenty.”

Chaturang Mori and the prince Ratan marched for Chitor, accompanied by a strong guard of 5000 Rájpúts.
CHAPTER XI.

Hamír assembled the remainder of his forces in a grand darbár and thus spoke: "My friends, if a man live, he will continue enjoying the pleasures of the world, and if he fall in glory on the battle-field, he will be translated to heaven. What do you prefer, my brave warriors? the enjoyment of the world, or the enjoyment of everlasting happiness? if the former, then do not come to me; if the latter, then make yourselves ready to fight the emperor."

Muhammad Sháh rose from the council and went with haste to his palace. He drew a sword and cut off the heads of his dearest relatives, his own kith and kin, even his own flesh and blood, lest Alá-úddín should insult them after his death. Soon afterwards he hastened to Hamír. In vain did he struggle to repress his feelings. Tears rolled down his cheeks, when he stood before the Ráó and informed him of the massacre.

Hamír said—"Do not be sorry, Muhammad Sháh; nothing is lasting in this world; none can escape from the jaws of death. In the various transmigrations which a man goes through, he remains subject to that grim monster. There is none on the surface of the earth who wishes his death, but would gladly extend his days. The death of a Sati, that of a hero, and that of a virtuous man are truly glorious and productive of much good."

(Turning to his Omráo.) "Wear clothes dyed with saffron, my vassals, because such a golden opportunity of attaining salvation and glorifying the names of our noble clans will not twice present itself. I, Ráó of Ranthambor, intend dying on the battle-field and abiding for ever at the feet of our Mahádeo. Alá-úddín cannot fall twice on our fort. I will distribute 1000 cows among the poor and fasten the mor, the crown of marriage, to my forehead."

Drums were beaten, and at their sound the Chohán colours were unfurled. Joy and the extreme thirst for glory knew no bounds and could not be contained in the hearts of the Ráó, his officers and soldiers. 5000 able Rájpúts were kept for the defence of the fort, and 80,000 became ready to fight the Muhammadans on the open field. None loved their lives and interests, and all were impatient of delay in rushing at their enemy. Here are the names of some of the thirty-six clans to which his vassals and soldiers belonged.*

Then went to arm himself the brave Ráó Hamír, the hero of minstrels' songs, the defender of the glory of the Rájpút power, very skilful in the art of war, benevolent, beautiful, strong-limbed and unwearied in fighting, even though he should be engaged continuously both day and night and wounded in every part of the body, for the sake of keeping the honour of the virtues of his illustrious fathers. His vassals went each to his tent to put on armour. They were so many lions in battle, no danger could daunt them: no obstacle, no difficulty, however great it might be, could move them in the least from their deliberate resolution. Their foreheads were smeared with streaks of the red sandal. With the names of the great Súrya on their lips they began to prance and rush like athletes. All were intent and resolved on doing something very terrible, they bathed, gave gifts of cows and gold to the Bráhmaṇs, and worshipped the Sun, Śiva and Vishnu. The honour of the virtues of the Kshatriyas occupied their minds and made them glad and exulting. They were descended of noble ancestors whose glorious actions are the subjects of many a minstrel’s songs. Elated with pride, with their heads erect, and energy beaming forth from their countenances, they made themselves ready to march with Hamír. They were steady in fight, regardless of life and interest, very charitable, brave, noble-minded, immovable from their resolution, and devoted to the worship of Hara.

* Kámadháj, Karam, Gaur, Tumár, Parihár, Púraj, Pandar, Chohán, Jadav, Gohil, Gehlot, Sagar, Punaír, and Bhils with Bhoj at their head.

Very brisk, active, fleet horses, well-caparisoned and guarded from head to foot from the weapons of enemies, were given each to his competent rider. 16,000 horses were equipped, of which 5000 were Turki, good at trotting, and 11,000 mild and well-trained Tíjí. All were of noble breed and very beautiful, catching the eyes of even a monarch. Their saddles were covered with ornamental embroidery and brilliant diamonds. Bunches of lace were upon their heads. Pairs of chamar hung by their sides, hiding the legs of the riders. Their necks were adorned with garlands of pearls, their manes were braided and their saddlery was made of rich silk and velvet. They seemed a thick flight of locusts. They were swifter than the wind. When they pressed their hoofs on the ground, fire came out instantly. They used to go through water as easily and swiftly as on the dry land. Riding on a horse of such mettle, a tolerable huntsman could put his bow around the neck of a deer while running fast in a jungle, and shoot a bird while in rapid motion. Each of these steeds was got for an equal weight of gold and diamonds.

The Katchi horses fled after the birds, the Iráki were very patient and mild, the Kandákári very beautiful, the Kábulli very attractive, dressed in silk and satin saddlery, the Kátinári very fleet and nimble, and the Araži could be compared with elephants.

The horses were divided into various groups according to their colours. 500 elephants, whose bodies were like mountains and whose roar like the peal of thunder, were taken with the Chohán army. The drivers could not control them but by charms. At first they went to their feet, bowed to them, and then unloosed their chains, but all their endeavours could not make them move. Then they amused them in various ways. They bathed them and rubbed their bodies with oil and vermilion. The moon was painted upon their foreheads. The red streaks of vermilion looked like flashes of lightning, dancing amidst the clouds of the wet season. Heudás were mounted upon them. When they, fierce and frantic with rage, rushed out, it seemed as if large masses of dark clouds came on rolling in the air and striking each other. Their huge tusks looked like herons flying about on a rainy day against sombre clouds. The exudation from their temples was like drops of rain. Massive shields were fastened to their heads. With an impetuous rush they marched as if the grim monarch of death ran forward to seize his victim. Men with discuses, arrows and pointed sticks ran all about them. They were spurred on by the pricking of goads. Sometimes they would stop in the way, and nothing could move them. Little drums were then sounded, and their sweet and soft strains induced them to proceed. The chámars, fanned on the riders, glittered in the sun.

All the chief Rájpút warriors bowed down to Hamír, who instructed them in various ways.

The heroes as well as celestial nymphs became elated with joy. The former put on their breastplates, while the latter their corsets. The former wore helmets, while the latter drew their veils on their heads. The former wore weapons of attack and defence, while the latter ornaments of diamonds. The former took their swords, while the latter applied unction to their eyes. The former put on their shields, while the latter their earrings. The former took their daggers, while the latter pressed the tilak on their foreheads. The former took betel, while the latter applied chup (a kind of golden teeth-ornaments) to their teeth. The former bent their bows and pulled the strings, while the latter darted sidelong glances. The former took knives in their hands, while the latter coloured theirs with myrtle. The former took up their spears, while the latter wreaths of flowers. The former bound their turbans tight with pieces of rich silk, while the latter pinned jewelled lockets (shishful) on their foreheads. The former pranced and leaped with exultation, while the latter displayed their fascinating manners. The former wore sheli (silken threads worn on the neck like the sacred thread of investiture), the latter their necklaces. The former smeared their foreheads with streaks of the sandal, while the latter combed their hair. The former took in their hand the tulsi rosaries, while the latter handled garlands of flowers. The former spurred their horses, while the latter drove their cars on the aerial way.
The elephants were ranged foremost, then followed the horses with flying colours. There was a peal of trumpets, drums, cow-mouthed pipes, chang and sáňáyi. The minstrels went on singing praises of the glorious exploits of the Choháns and accounts of the Rájpút chivalry, thereby inflaming the minds of all the warriors with an eagerness of displaying their military talents and becoming illustrious for ever, both here and hereafter. Very swift camels followed the troops of Hamír for the speedy despatch of messages.

Many cannons were taken to the front of the army. They were painted with vermilion. Their muzzles, with red colours streaming on them, seemed as if many terrible monarchs of death had opened their mouths and were showing their tongues. Sometimes the cannons would stop in the way, when wine and mutton were offered to them, and immediately they moved on. Matchlocks, small guns and several mitrailleuses,* followed in their wake.

At the singing of the martial air of sindhu all the troops set out, and celestial nymphs ran forward with garlands of flowers in their hands.

On the Muhammadan side all the Kháns and Umráos made good preparations for the capture of the fort of Ranthambor.

The two parties met. Brave and warlike heroes rushed forward from both sides and came face to face. Each of them was a terrible messenger of death. The battle raged with such fury that it seemed as if two mighty oceans, bursting over their conlines, had come on striking against each other, bringing destruction and devastation in their train. The Rájpút heroes ran forward. The brave and powerful Muhammadan Mirs met them. Columns of dust rose high up in the air and hid the sun. The martial music was sounded. The cannons boomed; the earth shook as well as the heavens. Flames burst forth on all sides. Dark smoke filled the air. There was a continuous shower of fiery shots which poured with violence like so many balls of gold. Heaps upon heaps of horses and elephants rolled on the ground, writhing in the agony of death. The ravage of fire-arms was so terrible that it seemed as if the cloud of death hung on the sky, pouring destruction everywhere. Blood began to flow from wounds in torrents. Large balls went through the bodies of elephants, making the wounds so open that vultures sat in them tearing and pulling out the flesh from within. They seemed as if numbers of devotees were engaged in contemplation, sitting in the caves of mountains. Many a horse was blown up. The cannons roared, and the volleys of fire emitted from their muzzles came on like flashes of lightning that attend thunder. Many mitrailleuses were fired at

* These were called chaddars, and were made by so fixing several gun barrels on an iron frame, as to admit of their being fired at once.
once. The continuous succession of the sounds of these fire-arms was like the sounds emitted from the fiery oven of a grain-baker. Thousands of guns were discharged all at the same time. The showers of their bullets were like the showers of hail-stones. Rockets of iron (bán) flew, circling with a great noise, and fell amidst the hostile ranks.

Heavy showers of arrows rained incessantly. Away they flew piercing many horses and elephants. There was a brisk play of tomars (sticks pointed at both ends). Many a lance was driven into the bowels of the Muhammadan soldiers amidst loud shouts. The swords began to flash fire. Even the massive heads of two elephants were cut off by one stroke. The blood of the slain flowed in torrents. When a sword was raised on the head of a Muhammadan, it failed not to cut through the helmet, the head, the breast-plate, the breast, the belly, the waist, the saddle and the horse. There danced and laughed Sambhu, the lord of tigers. With great glee he presented necklaces of human heads, one to every hero. Daggers were run through the breasts of the hostile soldiers. Their sharp points, seen outside the backs of the wounded, were like red hands of women stretched out of the windows of a balcony. The sharpest knives stabbed many a warrior, and konjars (battle-axes) despatched many more by opening large wounds in their chests. Here and there the heroes of both sides fell to wrestling. The din of the battle was deafening. Many bodies rose without heads and fled at their adversaries with a rush. The bowels of the slain were scattered all around and drawn hither and thither by the greedy vultures. The wounded, made desperate by the deep scars on their bodies, began to rave. The Joginis filled their cups with blood and feasted on flesh, and the Bhairavs danced with mirth, eating the hearts of the fallen. The infidel heroes were taken to heaven by the black-eyed Houris and the Hindú by the Apsaras. The goddess Káli opened wide her jaws and laughed, grinning at the Muhammadans.

The imperial forces withdrew in fear. The emperor, in an angry tone, thus exclaimed—"Where will ye fly to, ye fools? Wherever you may go, you can never escape from the fury of Hamír."

Alá-uddín to Míhrám Khán.—"See, Vazir, see how my cowardly troops prize their lives and fly away, while the Choháns are fighting bravely, regardless of life and interest. All the Kshatriyas are very faithful to the virtues of their clans. See, how they fight fearlessly and never show their backs to the enemy. See their bold determination, their unflinching courage, their noble resignation to fate, and lastly their heroic contempt of life. See, with what skill they are cutting our soldiers to pieces, never leaving for a moment the field of battle. On the other hand look at our forces. They, including the Mírs and the Amírs, love the world and withdraw in fear. What is to be done now, able minister, what means shall we take in this dire extremity?"

Mihrám Khán.—"Gracious Majesty, there is one means. Let us divide our forces into four corps, each under an able general. Give the Diwán the command of one, the Bakshi the other, me, your Vazir, the third, and yourself take the fourth. Let us then all unite in the field and fight very bravely; Hamír Ráo will never be able to withstand us."

This arrangement having been made, the Muhammadan troops came to the field. The crescents were raised aloft. Many able heroes, frantic and dreadful, riding on horses and painted elephants, surrounded the Rájpúts. They gave out a thrilling shout and went on very cautiously.

Both the Hindús and the Muhammadans rushed out, exulting, to the fight, puffed up with pride and courage. Then a massacre ensued. The cannons boomed. The fury of the shots drove the heroes to some distance. Again they ran forward and met. The field rang with the peal of the martial music, and the battle continued with unabated fury. The four-headed arrows of warriors went right through the hearts of soldiers, causing instant death. The forests of lances, darted with vehemence, repelled a body of hostile troops for a moment. The latter rushed forward, vaunting of their might. Their reeking swords cut down a large number of horses and elephants. Many warriors were struck dead, and their heads dropped down on the ground. Daggers were driven with determined hands. Thus battled both the parties, each exulting and glorying to win the victory. Heaps upon heaps of the slain lay scattered on the field—a dreadful spectacle!—on which vultures sat and feasted. The jackals licked the blood, and the she-devils filled their vessels, danced and sang with merriment. They wished for such another battle. They took pieces of flesh and bone into their bloody mouths, drained their cups, sucked their clothes steeped in blood and searched for more flesh. The superior archery of the Choháns secured the victory. The Muhammadan ranks, seeing that the day was against them, fled away in confusion.

Then exclaimed Bahádúr, the Mír of Abdál, curling his whiskers. "Order me, Royal Master, and this very moment I will, like a lion seizing a sheep, bring Hamír to your feet. Only give me in return the Ráj of Ranthambor. I will drag him into your presence, placing my bow around his neck." Abdál was placed at the head of 20,000 horse, determined to fight the emperor’s cause. With a wild outcry rushed the brave Mír to the field and came in front of Hamír, and with him 20,000 troops and 30 elephants ran forward, mad and frantic with rage. On the Rájpút side Hamír ordered a hero to march forward and meet the Muhammadan commander.
Both met, each vaunting of his own might. Elephant fought with elephant, horse with horse, and foot with foot—all engaged in the work of destruction. Drums were beaten and trumpets sounded. Cannons boomed and blew up many a brave young warrior. Swords falling on heads split the bodies into two. Their sharp blades were like the bloody jaws of the grim Yam. Many a wrestler and athlete fell. Heaps upon heaps of corpses lay in a confused mass. Men on elephants and elephants on men, all huddled together very rightfully on the field. Horses writhed and rolled in the agony of death. Behold! bodies without heads dance and wrestle, their heads send forth a shout which thrill every heart, to the horror of the living. Hillocks of bowels were formed, which falling one upon another, seemed as if the elephant and the tortoise mentioned in the Mahábhárata were again fighting with violence. The kites and vultures swooped down upon them and flew away with them. The bowels suspending from their talons looked like lines of kites in the hands of playful boys. Pieces of flesh were pinched out of many a living body, and blood issued in jets. Arms and legs dropped off, and heads began to roll like so many water-melons. Tanks of flesh and blood were formed. The goddess Káliká laughed, the Khetrapáls danced and surfeited themselves with great glee. Śiva leaped and, full of joy, wore new garlands of heads. 6000 Khorásánís fell and were taken to heaven by the black-eyed Houris. 30 elephants were cut to pieces and lay scattered on the field.

Muhammad Sháh bowed his head, joined his hands and asked for orders. Hamír remained silent. Then the Shaik exclaimed—“See, Ráo, see my skill in managing swords.” No sooner did he say the above words, than he flew in haste to the field. Seated at ease on his horse, he thus spoke out: “See, emperor, how good am I in the art of war. Why are you silent? Here stand I, your wrong-doer. See, here do I stand. Seize me if you can. I have come before you on an open field; now seize me as you used to vaunt, or if your words be false, you are no longer worthy the name of ‘emperor.’”

At the command of Alá-uddín 30,000 Khorásánís, with the Mír of Sadukí at their head, rushed forward, exclaiming: “We will catch the Shaik, give us in return the dominions of Hamír.” Drums and the high-sounding trumpets stirred them all to action. 10,000 heroes, the flower of chivalry, were with Muhammad Sháh. Besides, there were 23,000 soldiers. The famous Shaik spurred his horse and drew his sword in the teeth of the hostile army.

“Seize the villain, seize him alive, noble Sadukí” exclaimed the angry emperor at the top of his voice. “I will give you a jágir worth 12,000 a year.” At that very moment the Mír came forward, vaunting of his might. The Shaik bowed to Hamír and began to flourish his sword.
"Victory to the Crescent" was shouted by the Muhammadan ranks and "Victory to Hamír" by those of the Chohán. "Hear, Emperor," cried Mir Sadukí, "hear what a trifle is Hamír to me who have subdued 'Tatta Bhakar.'" With these words on his lips, he rushed out in wild fury, taking with him a detachment of 6000 picked Khorásání. Some soldiers advanced with flying colours. Heroes met with heroes, all brave, stalwart and proud. They bent their bows, pulled the strings, adjusted arrows with joy and shot them, each boastful of his own skill. The great Shaik began to fight very furiously. Swords flashed fire, and a dreadful massacre ensued. Hands and feet, arms and legs, heads and bellies dropped down. Many warriors fell on the ground and rose again with redoubled rage. Their bellies were cut, and the bowels came out, full of wind. All was a confused mass of flesh and blood. The 6000 soldiers were put to the sword; not a single man escaped. Their banners and drums were snatched away and presented to the Ráo.

A stronger body of Muhammadan heroes rushed to capture Muhammad Sháh. "Glory to you, valiant Chohán," exclaimed the latter, "your bravery, courage, truth and other manly virtues have won you a universal fame which will last for ever. You have staked your life and kingdom, wealth and property for the honour of your words. Glory to your decision of character, glory to your firmness. Your praises will be sung for evermore." The thought of parting with his noble patron crossed his heart and drew tears from his eyes. He continued, "When my future mother will give me birth, then shall I meet you, my generous Ráo."

Hamír replied.—"Warriors do not display soft feelings on the field. They do not love life, thinking it frail and transient. Union and separation go hand in hand. That which grows must perish; so it is taught by the Vedas. Do not be sorry, hero, do not lose heart. If you be separated here by death, be sure that grim monarch cannot separate us there in heaven. We shall all meet with one another, you, I, your wife, children, brother and the emperor too, the moment we leave our bodies. Leave interest and love. Nothing have we brought with us, and it is certain we can carry nothing away. This frail body is turned to dust, while good deeds live for ever in glory. Hear, Shaik, nothing is stable on the earth. What is our flesh? It is but a compound of dust, perishable at a slight accident. Why then love it? love virtue and glory and drain the last drop of your blood in order to have them."

Muhammad Sháh rushed headlong to the fight. Mir Gabru ran out from the imperial ranks and bowed to him.

Mir Gabru.—"I eat the salt of Alá-uddín, brother, and you that of Hamír. Let not our relation make cowards of us. Let us stand by our virtues at the peril of our lives. Although we shall part here from each other, we shall surely meet and live together there in everlasting happiness."

\textit{Ala-uddin said, smiling.—} "Hear, brave Muhammad Sháh, your words have come to pass to the very letter. You have never bowed down your head to me since you left the gates of Dehli. Give up your anger, and let us shake hands with each other and be friends again from this moment. Come and side with me. I give you the woman with whom you kept company, and besides, the province of Gorakhpur." The Shaik, smiled gently, and thus replied: "Remember, Emperor, the words you told me while in Dehli. Keep your promise to yourself. My mother has not borne in me so mean a son as to take what you give. Far from siding with you, I will, if God spare my life, try my best to have Hamír seated on the throne of Dehli, and his rule proclaimed through the length and breadth of India. I will never leave my generous patron and protector, but will worship his feet for evermore."

When Hamír heard this news he sent a body of troops to the aid of Muhammad Sháh with the following message—"Do not care for your life, Shaik. See, for the honour of my words, I have drawn my sword against the emperor of all India. Do not betray weakness now that I have staked so much for you. Do not fear to die; if you do so, Muhammad Sháh, then women are better than you. They keep their words, although they cost them their lives."

"Let us draw our swords, brother," exclaimed Mír Gabru, "and obey the orders of our masters. Our death is imminent."

Muhammad Sháh felt pleased. Both the brothers, glad and exulting, rushed at each other with drawn swords in their hands. They embraced each other. Mír Gabru falling at the feet of the Shaik asked for orders. "Brother," said the Mír, "we are killing each other for the sake of loyalty we bear to our masters. We shall never be blamed therefore." Fraternal affection yielded to the all-absorbing feelings of fidelity. The brothers rushed at each other. They shouted, their helmets touched the sky. They began to fight as if two monarchs of death encountered each other. They fell a-wrestling, brother with brother dying for their masters, an affecting scene indeed! There was a clashing of swords, which flashed like the flashes of fire seen, when woods and villages are burning on a summer night. Both fell, fighting bravely. Their hands, legs and heads dropped, and yet their trunks fought rolling against each other like two massive elephants. Celestial nymphs descended to marry both the heroes, and their dead faces wore a shining appearance.

They went to heaven amidst the cheering shouts of both the Hindús and the Muhammadans. The dying words of Muhammad Sháh were as follow: "Hear, Emperor, you need no more kindle the flame of war. Return to Dehli." (To Hamír.) "Mighty Chohán, your deeds will be immortal in this sinful Káli Yug, while the lives of others are as arrows shot, that leave no trace in the air. Master of my body, Ráo Hamír, you have fulfilled your words, you have brightened your house and family, you have no equal in this world, you have not read the Korán, while Alá-uddín invoked your gods. We have not, we two, bowed down to him." His quivering lips uttered 'Glory to Hamír.'

Chapter XII.

Alá-uddín was for effecting a reconciliation. He said, "Listen, warlike Hamír, the bravest of all heroes, listen with attention to what I tell you. You need not draw your sword again, for I have made up my mind to return to Dehli with the living remainder of my forces. I not only forgive you your offences, but give you fifty-two pargánás in addition to your territories. Reign undisturbed on them. I swear by the Korán that I will never assail your fort again. As is Dehli the capital of the Muhammadan government, so is Ranthambor that of the Chohán.

Hamír replied.—"Listen, Master of Dehli, and consider with attention. Who can avert the decree of fate? What is fated to be must happen, and no power, whether human or divine, can make it void. Whose are the territories that you are so presuming enough to give me? Did you give us our lands? No. Who sat you on the throne of Dehli? Your ancestors? No. It was destined. Then, where lies the use of your wise words? However powerful and cunning you may be, you can never avert predestination. Nothing is stable on the earth but deeds of glory. Conquer time. See, where are the cruel Duryodhan and the mighty Dashaśkandha (the ten-headed Rávana)? They have all been levelled in the dust. Whose is the fort, Emperor, and whose the throne of Dehli? They have been given to us by God. We were both parts of the great Padam Rishi. I have been born a Hindú, and you a Musalmán according to our virtues. You offended the gods, and so have been degraded to be an infidel. Leave enjoyment and hunger for land, and let us both go to heaven to live there, clad in everlasting glory. See, I have left my fort and come in your presence. I have kept my word. My companion and refugee has been blessed with a heavenly life. Let us follow him. Draw your sword, draw it, and do not delay. Love not the world. All earthly possessions are but husks of grain before a strong gust of wind. Fall with glory on the field, and let vultures and jackals feast on your flesh that you may be a sharer of eternal enjoyment, there in the world of felicity."
Alā-uddin’s blood boiled. He sent forth troops to the field. All the soldiers and officers became ready, and another battle raged with such fury as surpassed that of the war, waged by Pārtha on the famous plain of Kurukshetra.

80,000 Rájápis and Bhīls, armed with swords, bows, and arrows, were drawn up in battle-array. The line of elephants looked like thick clouds of autumn. Numbers of horses ran faster than the air. The swords flashed like lightning. The arrows seemed as if showers of rain were falling fast with violence. The war-minstrels sang martial airs. The drums sent forth their soul-stirring peals. Messengers darted hither and thither.

On the Muhammadan side Mír Sikandar took an oath, bowed his head, and received orders. He said in a vaunting tone, “I have captured the fort of Birjápur, so what a trifle is to me this fortress of Ranthambor. In vain have you, Emperor, pushed so many souls to death. Now see and admire my skill in fighting.” He took with him all the regiments of Kandahár and marched with fury.

From the Hindú ranks came out a Bhīl, named Bhoj, and asked Hamír for orders.

“Allow me, noble lord, to fight the Kandahárís.” “I can never do so,” replied Hamír. “Do you remember, Bhoj, that two brave Bhīls were, of their own accord, beheaded near the foundation of the gate-wall of the fort? of them One was your father. Rájá Jait promised you protection. You were bred by him, so how can I push you on to death? You are wise and valiant. Go to Chitoṛ, there to serve under the prince Ratan. Take this fleet horse and go there with all speed.”

_Bhoj._—“This head is devoted to your service, mighty Chohán. I am old and as long as I live, I will serve you. I consider my life as a pawn only for the cause of you, my master. If I lose this opportunity of showing my fidelity I shall never be able to gain it.”

He bowed down to Hamír, took with him his regiment and rode forward. There was a forest of bamboo bows, arrows and daggers on the field of battle.

Mír Sikandar rushed out and met them. The valleys rang with the soul-stirring peals of drums and trumpets, and banners flew aloft. The battle raged, the arrows whizzed. The two wings of the opposite parties met each other. The Mír commanded the riders on elephants to go forward. The Bhīls pulled their clothes tight over their breasts and rushed headlong to the fight. They, savage and ferocious with rage, held bows in their hands. As the sound of drums inspires an athlete with courage, and he springs and jumps, so leaped Bhoj at the sound of war-songs. Arrows were shot, and daggers driven into the bodies of enemies. An elephant rushed with fury and was the next moment torn into two pieces by two Bhils named Moria and Bhuria. This was followed by a fierce out-rush of all the Bhils. They fell on the ranks of Alá-uddín and seemed as if angry legions of bears and monkeys were destroying the golden fields of Ceylon.

There was a play of daggers which stabbed many a warrior to death. "Behold, Vazir," said Alá-uddín to Míhrám Khán, "behold how the Bhils fight. They are making a rush at our men like so many enraged bears." Bhoj and Sikandar met. "Raise your sword, Mír, raise your sword at first," exclaimed the brave Bhíl. "Pity, pity, old man, I pity your old age," replied the Mír. Bhoj burned with anger. He ran a dagger with violence into the bowels of Sikandar. The latter laughed and struck the former dead in an instant. Down dropped the head, but lo! the body rose and made a fearful rush, committing a great massacre. Sikandar fell, and a beautiful Houri came down and took him up to Paradise. Innumerable soldiers of Kandahár fell with him. The trunk of the brave Bhíl danced on the field and yet stopped not its work of destruction. It rushed and rushed on with unspeakable fury. The imperial forces withdrew.

The loss on the Muhammadán side was 25,000 soldiers of Káshmir, 30,000 Kandahárís with Sikandar at their head, and ten Mírs headed by Ali Sher, while that on the Hindú was 2000 Bhils with Bhoj.

The troops of Alá-uddín ran away in confusion. Hamír alighted from his elephant and came to the corpse of the brave Bhoj. He could not suppress his feelings; he wept; he said: "Who can measure the agony of my heart? Bhoj, my dear companion, is dead. You were unsurpassed in bravery, mighty Bhíl, and are now glorious in immortality. Oh! that I could follow you to that region of felicity whose gates have been open to receive you with honour. Glory to you, bravest of heroes, faithful to the salt."

While Hamír was lamenting the death of the Bhíl, Jayan Sikandar came unawares and rushed at the Ráo to seize him. But he was disappointed. The Chohán troops arrived in time, and Hamír mounted on his elephant.

The emperor's blood boiled at the sight of his men flying away from the field. "Why fly away, cowards, why fly away from the field? You have all been fed on the richest food and have enjoyed many blessings under my rule. What! to fly away and love life and interest at this critical moment and to heap shame on my head!"

All the heroes were stimulated. They rushed again to fight with Hamír. 200,000 of Kandahárís with Jayan Sikandar at their head marched, while Hamír, for the sake of truth and religion, made his soldiers ready for another battle. Cannon and other fire-arms were no longer made use of, and swords only were taken in hand.

Ráo Hamír pulled the string of his bow and away flew shafts of arrows whizzing through the air. It seemed as if the mighty Arjún was fighting again on the field of Kurukshetra. Many elephants were pierced. Down they fell and rolled, roaring with agony. The mails of the horses were run through, and the fire-headed arrows flew away with violence from the bodies of many noble steeds, carrying their lives with them. They rained like the showers of the rainy season. The Mírs and Ráwats met. The latter rushed out from their ranks. Clad in clothes dyed with saffron, with the marriage-crowns fastened to their heads, many fierce warriors ran forward with thrilling shouts. The war-minstrels began to sing their praises, as they darted flashing like meteors. The hair of their erect whisks touched their eyes, and all their hairs were erect, being inflamed with rage, energy and pride.

A thick array of elephants was set in front of the imperial force. The Rájpút heroes made at them with sword in hand and fire in their hearts. Hamír roared, standing on the field. The earth and the heavens shook with the peals of the martial music. Banners streamed. Some elephants were hurled in the air, others were struck dead. Some were torn into two, the trunks of others were cut off so swiftly, as if they were so many plantain trees. The tusks of some were broken, and the poor elephants instantly fled, roaring and writhing in pain. Others were caught by the tails and tusks and thrown suddenly on the ground. Heaps upon heaps of carcases were scattered on the field, and blood began to flow from wounds in torrents, as jets of water flow from a fountain. Many good horses rolled hither and thither, with their legs and bodies cut in pieces. Again the swords flashed. Heroes fought with heroes, while cowards fled away. The heads of some dropped, the legs of others, the arms of some and the breasts of others. Down came many warriors with a sound like the crash of falling timbers. The reeking swords fell on the heads of some, and the heads fell down and uttered forth a horrible scream, while their bodies began to dance on the field. Arrows whizzed, swords flashed, they sounded as the axe of the wood-cutter when at work in a jungle. The sharp lances went through many bodies as enraged serpents go to their dens. Daggers stabbed many, knives were run through, whose points looked on the other side of the body like tails of the cobra de capello. The bisán was driven with force, and breasts were rent into two.

The athletes commenced wrestling. Some were hurled in the air. The hands of others were sprained and plucked out. Some lost their heads, and others their legs. The earth was unable to drink the blood of which a river flowed from the field. The huge carcases of horses and elephants, piled in heaps, formed its banks; the wheels of war-chariots caused currents. The bows driven by a gentle wind looked like waves, the hands and legs like serpents, and fingers with rings on them like shoals of shrimps, the heads surmounted by red turbans like lotuses, the shady eye-brows like the black-bee, and the hair like mosses. The bathing-places were where the heroes were vaunting each of his might. The Yoginis, filling their basins with the red liquid, looked like a troop of beautiful women filling their jars and pitchers, and Bhairavs, Sambhu and Kálíká, dancing with great glee, like persons coming to bathe in the sacred months of Bysák and Kartika (April and October).

The living remainder of the troops of Alá-uddín withdrew in fear and shame. Standing on the field, the mighty Hamír roared like a lion. Many jackals, vultures and kites flew hither and thither, feasting on flesh and blood.

The flashing sword of Hamír fell on the head of Sháh Sikandar Jahán. Down dropped his enormous head with a crash. 125,000 Kanda-háris were put to the sword. Besides, 100,000 of Alá-uddín's own troops, 500 elephants and 10 Mírs fell. Here are the names of the last-named. Shesh, Mahesh, Murád, Muhabbat, Muzaffar Alí, Núr, Askar Alí, Nizám Alí, Sikandar Sháh, Núr-uddín.

The wounded heroes raved here and there, quite furious and blood-thirsty. The bright ear of the sun stopped as if its majestic rider would take a view of this dreadful spectacle. Even gods were taken aback. They wondered at the military prowess of Hamír and looked with admiration at the field of carnage. The gates of heaven were opened, and all the slain were taken above, the Hindús by handsome Apsaras, and the Muham-madans by black-eyed Hourís. The loss of the Choháns was four heroes only.

"Hara, Hara, Hara" shouted the bold Hamír and, mounted on his elephant, rushed at the emperor. His reeking sword flashed in his hand. He exclaimed, "Come on, Alá-uddín, come and fight with me, draw your sword, fight with me, come along." The emperor became greatly enraged. Full of anger, he rushed to go in front of the Chohán prince. But his troops would not advance a step. The mighty Ráó was a lion in fight, therefore they feared to come before him. Some Mírs and Vazírs only were with Alá-uddín.

"How is this, Vazír," said the emperor to Mihrám Khán, "where are my forces? On whatever side I cast my eyes, I see none but the mass-es of the Chohán army."

Mihrám Khán replied.—"The best counsel, I can offer your Majesty, is to make friends with the Choháns and live in peace."
The emperor sent a herald to the Ráo with proposals of peace. He wrote, "Pardon my faults, brave Chohán, and effect a reconciliation. Enjoy undisputed your land and territory in the heart of Rájpútána. I have made up my mind to return to Dehli."

When Hamír got the letter, he thus replied, "We are both on the field; we have come here to fight, and not to sue for peace. I cannot grant this request. He who uses humble words, words of weakness before an enemy clad in mail, is a coward, and nothing but a coward; or if you have any other motive, Emperor, be sure, it will bear no fruit." (To the herald.) "Go, herald, go to your emperor, and tell him that I am ready with my troops and will never go away without fighting with him."

Hamír to his vassals.—"My brave Sirdárs, do just as I bid you. The Rájpúts fight with thirty-six arms; but mind, in this battle, we will use four only—swords, daggers, khanjars and bisáns. Be glorious by fighting the emperor with these weapons, leaving aside the use of fire-arms—cannon, ban, chaddar, hatknár, jambhur, muskets, pistols and guns. Fall on the Muhammadan forces; but see, you do not kill Alá-uddín: if you die, you are sure to go to heaven and live there with handsome Apsaras for evermore."

The Sirdárs obeyed his orders. Clad in clothes dyed with saffron and fastening the crowns of marriage on their heads, they attacked the Muhammadan ranks.

There was not a single fire-arm, neither were there any bows and arrows. Swords only were played. The emperor came to the field, full of rage. Both the parties met. Throats, hands and legs dropped on the ground. Bodies were cut off in the middle, as the sharp edge of a saw divides a block of wood. Many a head fell, but the body rose and danced horribly on the field. The headless trunk of a Chohán made a rush and drove the trunk of a Muhammadan away. The severed heads shrieked and shouted, and their shouts sent a thrill to the hearts of the living soldiers. Daggers were run through, held in determined hands. Khanjars (battle-axes) opened large wounds on the chests, and bisáns (short poniards firmly attached to the fist) stabbed hearts of adamant. The field wore a very gay appearance, being ornamented with five different colours. The Bakshí was put to the sword. The moment he fell, the troops of the emperor ran away in confusion. There was a terrible din on the field. It seemed as if the dead rose and shouted with fury, opening their bloody jaws and extending their hands to fight. At the fall of the Bakshí, Alá-uddín himself reined his elephant aside. Only his Vazir was with him. A body of Chohán soldiers surrounded the elephant.

"Do not slay the emperor," exclaimed Hamír at the top of his voice, "do not slay him, for such is not the virtue of the Kshatriya. It is a sin to kill an emperor because he gives food to thousands of souls. Besides, Alá-uddín calls himself ‘master of the world.’"

Then was the emperor taken into the presence of Hamír, who said "Emperor, return to Dehli safe."

The next moment Alá-uddín, with the remainder of his forces, encamped four miles behind his former camp, in the direction of his capital. Considerable booty fell to the hands of the Chohán troops—tents, furniture, ensigns, weapons and money. All the wounded, irrespective of their caste, were taken special care of, and their wounds dressed. They were then sent each to his own country.

The sweet peals of Dándhaví sounded the march. Full of joy Hamír started to return to his fort. He was too glad to remember what he had said to the princess Ašá, his favourite wife. Some soldiers in the front line had the imperial colours in their hands. The eager princess saw them from the fort, and, thinking that victory had gone to the Musalmáns, committed a dreadful massacre and killed one and all, preferring death to ignominy.

When the Ráó entered the fort, he heard of the massacre, and the next moment he saw before him the lifeless body of his dear queen, that of his daughter Dewál, and those of the maids lying on the ground, with streams of blood gushing out from the wounds. Then he called to mind the words of Siva. He resolved to cut off his own head and offer it at the feet of the god. He informed his Vazirs, officers and Ráwats of his determination.

"Patience, patience, royal master" prayed a hero. "Do not shorten your life. What was fated to be, has come to pass. Long live you in glory under the protection of Mahádeva. Grant our prayer and request. All your warriors join their hands and entreat you. Do not, mighty Ráó, behead yourself."

Hamír exclaimed.—"Hear, my brave heroes, partners of my labours and pains, hear with attention. The lion enjoys carnal pleasures but for once. The word which has once come out of the mouth of a virtuous man can never be withdrawn. The plantain yields its fruit only once. The oil which is rubbed over the head of a woman on the occasion of her marriage can never be rubbed again in her life. And the firm resolution of Hamír of doing what he has once said can never be shaken."

Hamír bade adieu to all present, ordering them to go to Chítor to the service of the prince Ratan. All alone the great Ráó the present head to the god. The apsaras descended from

* हिंदी विषय, वनस्पति चवन, केळि फले एकवर। क्रिया एल, इमोर छट्टचड़ ना तुलिंगार। ह द
heaven, singing hymns of praise. Urvasi, the fairy-queen, threw garlands of flowers on his head and rubbed it with nectar. In heaven the gods sang 'Glory to Hamir,' and on earth all men did the same. Great rejoicings were made in the golden city of Amaravati on the grand occasion of the great Chohán's entering into Paradise. Glory, glory, glory to the brave and generous Ráo of Ranthambor!

_Punishment of Sarjan Sháh._—After the death of Hamir, Sarjan Sháh called Alá-uddin to the fort of Ranthambor. The emperor was struck dumb by Hamir's resolution. He gave vent to his feelings of admiration in the following words: "Glory to you, Ráo Hamir, glory to your mother who bore in her womb such a heroic son. Your words are true. You are a perfect pattern of disinterestedness. You have left life and interest for the cause of one, a foreigner by birth, creed and nationality. The earth will never see such a hero again. You are unequalled in bravery, Hamir. I offered you terms of peace continually for fourteen years, but you were immovable from your purpose and resolution like a mountain. May your name be glorious from one end of the world to the other. Glory to you, valiant hero of heroes."

Turning about, the emperor said to Sarjan Sháh: "Listen to what I say, now. The Ráo is dead, go and get me a hair of his head." Mahádeva frowned, and the following words were heard to come out. "Take care, thou vile monster, thou ungrateful wretch, if thou advance one step to execute thy foul purpose, thou art a dead man, and thy head severed from thy body."

Sarjan was frightened out of his wits. The emperor laughed, looked at him, and thus exclaimed, "Basest of all mortals, thou faithless to thy salt, thou hast no equal in villainy. In return for thy black deeds take this deserving reward." His head was cut off, and his body tied to the tail of an elephant and dragged all about the camp.

---

APPENDIX.

Chaturbhuj, the first Chohán, sprung from the Analkund, had two wives, Chakramati and Anatrambhá.

Chaturbhuj by Chakramati.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Bhunál.</th>
<th>Chaturbhuj by Anatrambhá.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Bhunál worshipped Jín Mátá, and built the fort of Jínór.</td>
<td>Sekand Rájá.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Rájá Sekand worshipped Asá Puri, finally called Sambháno Mátá and built the fort of Jalloř.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
His clans.

1. Júnawal Choháns (12 tribes).
2. Dadrora
3. Kám Kháni
4. Dák
5. Rakshiyá
6. Bhakshiyá
7. Narbechhá
8. Jarchhá
9. Ták
10. Dori
11. Níman
12. Daiman
13. Marwál
14. Dál
15. Sachódq
16. Dhachódq
17. Chayél
18. Moyél
19. Gul-i-bash
20. Charar
21. Bishutrá
22. Deshutrá

His clans.

1. Daorá Choháns.
2. Sangrava
3. Khinchi
4. Balichá
5. Hárá
6. Há
7. Chöká
8. Dhanarayál
9. Bhagariá
10. Shachorá
11. Dhachorá
12. Alnot
13. Mínáwat
14. Bidúnsia
15. Thúmia
16. Kolí
17. Bahálá
18. Chabelá
19. Baletá
20. Jahellá
21. Sahellá
22. Sipat
23. Bhágravat

---

Sekand Rájá.
| Shubatsha.
| Chand.
| Bana Rikh.
| Brahmá Rikh.
| Indrasaen.

Jahn Rikh.
| Ayan Rikh.
| Mahat Rikh.
| Múní Rikh.
| Bóm Rikh.
| Rúp Rikh.
| Bhoj Rikh.
| Shyam Rikh.
| Shúvan Rikh.
| Khauk Rikh.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Khaus Rikh.</th>
<th>Bám Dit.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Anant Rikh.</td>
<td>Gang Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bhao Rikh.</td>
<td>Bhum Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Showan Rikh.</td>
<td>Ajai Bhum Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jaman Rikh</td>
<td>Mín Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dev Rikh.</td>
<td>Udai Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chahí Dit.</td>
<td>Bijai Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nara Dit.</td>
<td>Yagh Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daya Dit.</td>
<td>Lauk Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ban Dit.</td>
<td>Preja Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hara Dit.</td>
<td>Bishwa Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nág Dit.</td>
<td>Mantra Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chakra Dit.</td>
<td>Baran Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sur Dit.</td>
<td>Budh Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shúnya Dit.</td>
<td>Bhóg Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Narendra Dit.</td>
<td>Gau Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shyám Dit.</td>
<td>Dhúm Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dhom Dit.</td>
<td>Trayan Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shúvan Dit.</td>
<td>Réj Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Karan Dit.</td>
<td>Chandra Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dháú Dit.</td>
<td>Réjendra Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bám Dit.</td>
<td>Kul Pál.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Kul Pál.  |  Bijai Chandra.
---|---
Abhay Mandab.  |  Hamir Chandra.
Nara Mandab.  |  Rai Chandra.
Shuvan Mandab.  |  Mahi Chandra.
Chahi Mandab.  |  Bal Chandra.
Rikh Mandab.  |  Gobind Chandra.
Batshaya Mandab.  |  Omi Chandra.
Goal Mandab.  |  Náráyan Chandra.
Sajan Mandab.  |  Mánik Chandra.
Chakra Mandab.  |  Trisíňha Dev.
Shúr Chakra Mandab.  |  Hem Dev.
Maru Mandab.  |  Hara Dit.
Kúmbha Mandab.  |  Meg Pál.*
Baran Jang Mandab.  |  Ráj Pál.
Dirang Mandab.  |  Karláš Rájá.
Kúňwar Mandab.  |  Bhawak Dev.
Bhringdeo Ráj.  |  Bhimarath.
Arúr Chandra Ráj.  |  Shukmal.
Ráj Chandra.  |  Amarmal.
Shyám Chandra.  |  Jaman Bhím.
Bijai Chandra.  |  Samant.

* Meg Pál wrested the white umbrella of Indra. Hence the white colours of the Choháns.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Samant.</th>
<th>Kumbh Pál.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Nara Dev.</td>
<td>Dhúm Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bhúm Dev.</td>
<td>Antra Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shúr Ráo.</td>
<td>Mahi Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anka Ráo.</td>
<td>Vatsa Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abhai Ráo.</td>
<td>Ratan Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ajag Ráo.</td>
<td>Raí Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bóm Ráo.</td>
<td>Karan Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dham Ráo.</td>
<td>Sewant Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shubudhi Ráo.</td>
<td>Hara Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chhatrapat Ráo.</td>
<td>Sió Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Púr Ráo.</td>
<td>Jamaund Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rúp Ráo.</td>
<td>Íjj Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shunyajit Ráo.</td>
<td>Índra Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ayan Ráo.</td>
<td>Lún Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ranjít Ráo.</td>
<td>Udai Pál.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aranjít Ráo.</td>
<td>Vatsha Dev.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prajápal Rájá.</td>
<td>Chakra Bhúp.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chandrapál Rájá.</td>
<td>Ajai Chandra.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bújaidit Rájá.</td>
<td>Chiman Dev.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yogendra Pál.</td>
<td>Anal Dev.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ami Pál.</td>
<td>Vatsa Ráj.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kumbh Pál.</td>
<td>Matsya Ráj.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
1879.]

or a History of Hamir, prince of Ranthambor.

| Matsya Ráj. | Gahu. |
| Hara Dit. | Nara Dev. |
| Shur Dit. | Basu Dev. |
| Jana Dit. | Mánik Rao, reigned in Sá-mar. |
| Trichhanna Dev. | Maliagar. |
| Arak Dev. | Malayasi. |
| Daud Nares. | Krit Bimb. |
| Dháol. | Sáwant Shi. |
| Anna Mahi. | Narendra. |
| Bijai Mahi. | Big Ráj. |
| Chand Ráj. | (founded Ajmir in 343 (Sambat) and built the fort of Tárágárh. |
| Bil Dev. | Ajai Ráj |
| Kabilás. | Ajay Pál.* |
| Bichitra. | Prithviráj I,† son of Bísaul |
| Gahu. | Alán Dev. |

* Ajay Pál.

| Chatak Dev. |
| Bijay Pál. |
| Chandan Dev. |
| Chatak Dev. |

† Prithviráj I, had 9 sons.

1. Alan Deo—father of Alnat Chohánṣ who reigned in Ajmir.
2. Prithviráj II.

---

Súraj Mál father of the Shangra Chohánṣ, who built the fort of Shangra.

21 sons ruled in Etgarh.

1. Harsha Rájjí ruled in Dhúnotí.
2. Sains Málji " " Bigota.
3. Bírám Chándjí " " Kumayu.
4. Trilók Chándjí (Khayír Jártoí ká Rájá).

10 & 11. Gáher, Báher (Káshiká Choháns).

12, 13, 14, 15, 16. Nauljí, Gásainjí, Chítá Rájí, Bámbh Rájí, Barshí, ruled in Pachewárá, had 500 villages, and 6 towns—Káhu, Lálsót, Lewalá, Dígo, Lanká and Baráúndo.

17. Ajja—Shrí Mál Bunniyá descending from him.
20. Mír.
No. 1.

SKETCH MAP
Showing Villages about
KANDAHAR

From Observations with a Prismatic Compass, during February 1879; in Tarnak Valley during Advanced Foraging Expedition, 1st Division, Kela-i-Ghilzai to Kandahar; in Arghistan Valley during Reconnoitting Expedition.

Distribution of the Population—1.

Morgan Kebich.
Makram.
Mahmoud.
Khalil.
Kahwachi.
Deheh Darya.
Deheh Istar.
Ahmad Talib.
Shahpour.
Kabul (Tarnak V.)
Khushal.
Deheh Khoja.
Pongi.
Ganzala.

Abd ur Rahim Khan.
Dokh i Darya.
Nabi Sallam.
Kala i Sufi i Shah.
Kala e Rahm.
Kala e Khola (Afghanistan V.)
Abu.
Ph Daul.
Ali Ahmad Khan.
Molud Khan.
Mir Ahmad Khan.
Fir Mohammad Khan.
Abd al-Rahim Khan.
Assin Kala.
Shah Mohammad.
Safi al-Shah.
Zangi Khan.
Mohammad Khan.
Nasir ud-Din Khan.
Bustani.
Kala i Musa-ud-Din Khan.

Dokh i Haji, Ali.
Khalil Daul, Riaz.
Makram, Makram.
Khudai Khtan, Khuglai.
Sagra, Sagur.
Takai, Takai.
Kher Ali.
Moila, Faisa.
Shahab.
Bilaw.
Hulaf, Pain.
Haji Ali.
Mund Hame.
Malang.
Mokram.
Syed Mohammad.
Lando, Lando.
Khalil Khoja.
Kolachi, Khoja.
Syed Mohammad Shah.
SKETCH MAP
Showing Villages in Tarnak and Arghisan Valley.
(In Continuation of No. 1.)

Distribution of the Population.

Khal-i-Akhund, Karazai.
Kala-i-Amil, Bakhsh.
Khanzad, Sanduz.
Zakariya, Kala-i-Sher Ali.
Bamzai, Sokhtas.
Tang, Suraj, Habbullah, Jahlugir, Ayaz.
Amin Kala, Imsil Khun.
Noorzai, Nazir.
Kalai, Liuk.
Shir Mohammad, Jalal.
Sanduzai, Sartip Nur Mohammad.

Scale 1/12 in. = 4 Miles to the Inch.
The Index of Vol. XLVIII of 1879 will be issued with No. I of Vol. XLIX of 1880.
The Burmese have borrowed their alphabet, religion, literature and a large portion of their language from the neighbouring continent. The alphabet was no doubt introduced at a very early period. It has never been analysed with any care, but its square variety approximates more closely to the Asoka and fifth century (B. C.) inscriptions than any later Indian modifications. It was adopted en bloc, though the Burmese have never themselves found any use for 12 out of the 34 consonants and have altered several of the sounds, notably the 2nd varga from “ch” and “j” to “s” (pronounced more or less like the “e” in there) and “o” into “ō” (like the “aw” in “law”). To express the sound of an “o” and “ai,” they invented a new compound, which I propose calling “ui” from the symbols it is apparently composed of. The remaining characters, for my present purpose, will be more conveniently designated by their Indian equivalents.*

The earliest date mentioned in the national chronicle is the foundation of the Sarekhettarā kingdom (B. C. 482). Previous to this, lengthy lines of kings with Indian names are mentioned at Saṅgassa and Pañcala, as the old capitals of Tagoung and old Pugán were denominated. There is no adequate reason, so far as I can see, for rejecting the Indian origin of these early kingdoms. The country was in much the same state as Karen-ní or the Kachyen hills are at present; inhabited by a number of petty

* A paper on Burmese Transliteration was contributed by the writer to the R. A. Society and published in their Journal for April 1878.
tribes with scarcely a shred of order, civilization or authority among them. The advent of an Indian prince (be he real or the reverse), with a little band of refugees, would have much the same effect as the advent of a Burmese “mintha” among the Karen Highlanders. He may be the sole element required for order, coherence and organization. The separate clans become a nation, the separate states a kingdom, a dynasty is established, and history commences. The rulers will introduce as far as possible their own language, usages and religion. Their sons and cities will have sonorous Indian titles, and they will import astrologers, sages and as many representatives of their native Pantheon as their subjects can comfortably digest. A hundred years or so, and these will remain the sole testimonies to their foreign extraction. This is exactly what has happened in Burma. The bulk of the Aryan element, no doubt, found its way into the language hundreds of years later through a Pali channel, when Anôrâtha in the eleventh century A. D. brought the “Three Baskets” from Thalton and had them translated into the vernacular. But Sanskrit words had entered the language before this, without any connection with Buddhism. The names for the days of the week are derived from a Sanskrit source, though distorted at times beyond recognition. Âṅga, Buddhâhû ; Sokrâ ; Krâsa-pate :* and Chane are identifiable, but Tanañlâ and Tanañgânve have as yet defied analysis. So too the signs of the zodiac, such as priccha, karakaṭ, prissa, more nearly resemble the Sanskrit; while such words as khyânise a lion, rasse a rishi, athwaḍ (S. thuḍ to cover) a pinnacle, hûrâ : (S. horá) astrologers, prittâ (S. pretá) the dead, missa (S. meṣa) a ram, prassad (S. prásâda) a tower, seem to point to a time when the foreign vocables were written down as they sounded in Burmese, without reference to their etymology. The presence of the “r” also in such words as samuddârâ, krattikâ, ammuik (amṛita), krammâ, drâp (darpa), gruih (graha), chakrá, aggirat, bhûmirat, indicate an earlier source than Pali. As time went on, the importations vastly increased, and an estimate of words of Indic extraction as constituting one-seventh of the whole Burmese vocabulary would be rather under than over the actual proportion. Many, no doubt, are corrupted and contorted beyond all knowledge. Captain Latter remarks in his grammar that there is no such thing as orthography in the Burmese language, and no doubt the existence of 12 superfluous characters and the slurred enunciation of final consonants have led to a good deal of confusion. Such forms as vibhâk (vipaka), puppâ (pubba), phoṭhappâ (phoṭhhabba), kû (guba), bhavak (bhavaggaṇ) are typical instances of common errors, and many others will be noticed among my examples. Neither Dr. Judson in his Dictionary nor Dr. Mason in his Pali Grammar can be relied on, and I regret to state that the provincial government is among the worst of offenders. Besides countenancing the most frenzied methods of transliteration, it had the temerity to allow the Education Department to publish a collection of popular Burmese texts with but the scantiest acquaintance with the language. Pali MSS. were exclusively relied on, the result being that it is almost impossible to conceive more orthographical errors being included within a smaller space.

* The change of an initial labial into a guttural is rare in Burmese. The only other instance I know of is pattarâ into kuttarâ. The change of t into s is common enough.

The process of engrafting Aryan vocables on a Mongoloid stock must be more or less clumsy and inadequate. Gotama would scarcely understand ten words together of his own doctrine as recited by a phungyi, and most certainly could not make himself intelligible to a Burmese audience. The character must always be a most unsatisfactory one to adopt for any new dialect or language. In reducing Karen to writing, the American Missionaries had a grand opportunity of introducing the Latin alphabet (with the necessary additions) which was just as intelligible to their converts as any other, and which would have led easily to a general scheme of vernacular transliteration. They were misguided enough, however, to employ Burmese, the consequence being a series of appalling hieroglyphics incomprehensible to all but the contrivers. I hear that Kachyen is to undergo a similar treatment. This is the language spoken by all the Singphos on the borders of Burma and Assam and deserves a better fate than being interred within an ingenious (perhaps) but inscrutable cipher. May I be permitted to record a feeble and, no doubt, ineffective protest? Apart however, from a want of orthoepical precision (to use Dr. Wilson’s phrase) there is a certain amount of method and uniformity observed in the appropriation of Pali terms. I have been able to frame a simple set of rules which are tolerably comprehensive and which may be of some use in dealing with future importations. It will be noted (1) that anusvāra and the nasals are freely interchangeable, (2) that visarga (which in Burmese is only used as a grave accent after long vowels and nasals) is added without any reference to the original.

1. The word was imported whole.
   E. g. kāla, sati, utu, gati, ussabha, rathā:, kulā:, khaṇa, upamā.
   Often inflected or misspelt.

   E. g. asavo, upaddavo, pakate (pakati), chute (chuti), sare (siri), yūjanā (yojanami), haṁsa (haṁsa), aṁsa (aṁsa), parikkhayā (parikkhāra),* milak-

* Cf. also Tiruvchchhāna for Tiruvchchhána. There was evidently some false analogy deduced from “viriya” another importation.
Derivations in Burmese.

II. It was abbreviated,

(a.) if the penultimate vowel was "a" or "i" and the last consonant uncompounded, by changing the vowel into "ui" and dropping the termination.

E. g. phuil (phalam), buil (balam), gruib (graha), naguiy (nagaram), makuiy (makaṭa), rakkbuik (rakkbaka), guin (gana), kasuin (kasiiia), karuin (karanam?), samuin (samanna?). But kuiy (kaya) is an exception.

"T" was occasionally changed into "k."

E. g. charuik (charita), amruik (amrita.)

(b.) If the penultimate vowel was neither "a" nor "i," or if the last consonant was a compound, the final vowel or syllable was dropped.

E. g. adhippay (adhippaya), apay (apayo), dan (danda), dat (datu), upachá (upachára), upade (upadesa), alin (alinda), kaṇṇamā (kaṇṇamālaṃ), chhan : (chhanda), dhutaṅ (dhuttaṅga), pullaṅ (pullanko), nimit, (nimit-taṃ), kun (kumbha), vaṅ (vaṃsa), ekam (ekaṃsa), kan (kaṇṇā).

N. B. In "jani" (janikā) and chheti (chhetiyā) the i has been lengthened to allow the operation of this rule.

Occasionally the vowel was shortened.

E. g. nam (nama), yam (yama), amat (amātya), dan (dāmaṃ), bhui (bhūmi), atit (atitam).

2. In some cases more than one syllable is dropped.

E. g. upád (upādānaṃ), byaṅ : (byaṅjanaṃ), navarat (navaratanaṃ), pīṭakat (pīṭakataṃ).

3. "o" is changed into "u" in the words—anulūm (anuloma), upus (uposatha), alup (ālopa).

4. The vowel is lengthened in the words—
tū (tula), kū (guha), vá (vassam).

5. A penultimate y is often changed into ŭ or ē.

[As a final, ŭ has 3 sounds in Burmese, the first nearly corresponding to "i," the second to "e," the 3rd (with an anusvāra) to "in."]

E. g. naṅ (naya), pachchaṅ (pachchaya), vinaṅ (vinaya), ūrē (niraya), sahē (sahāya).

6. The letters ŭ (with an anusvāra), ū and u are often employed anomalously.

E. g. jaṅ (jana), abhiṅnāṅ (abhiṅnā), upamaṅ (upamānaṃ), uyyaṅ (uyyānaṃ), sabhaṅ (sabhā), bhavaṅ (bhava), maggaṅ* (magga), águm

* Dr. Judson derives maggan from maggaṅa. This appears unnecessary and erroneous.
(āgamma), arūṇ (arammanā), nīgūṇ : (nigama), saraṇagum (saraṇa gama-nam), apūd (apada), vevuch (vevachanaṃ), uṉalun (uṉalamba ?).

III. Occasionally some other change occurred in the word, viz.—

(a.) The Burmese substantive prefix “a” was given.
E. g. arup (rūpam), arasā (rasam), akhaṇ (khaṇḍeti).
(b.) The initial vowel was dropped.
E. g. pamā (upamā), laṅkā (alaṅkāra), dhiṭṭhān (adhiṭṭhānam), bhissit (abbisito), rahan : (araham), numo (anu modanā).
(c.) Some medial alteration took place.
E. g. muṅgh (meghā), adhwān (addhāna), bhe : (bhaya), sabbo (sabhava), galun (garulo), mahut* (muhuttā), puthui (thūpo ?). For a similar inversion compare danchakā : for chandakū ; krapate for prakate, and perhaps rakhuīn for kharuīn.

The above is a brief and imperfect summary of the methods employed in adapting Pali derivatives to the Burmese vernacular. Some of the changes and modifications were necessitated by the character of the language; others were dictated by euphony. I have not here analysed the reasons for any change, nor have I noticed the specialities or alterations of meaning which many words have assumed in their transfer. Such terms as saṅbhō (a ship), saṅkān : (a chāvra), saṅkhām : (a hermitage), dūvām
(the north star), pariya(y artifice), charit (expenses), joti (a schismatic) cannot be found with such significations in any Pali or Sanskrit dictionary, and a long list of obviously Indie words could be made up comprising such common names as puṇā : (a Brahmin), muṭṭho (a dagoba), rikkhā (provisions), purapuik (a slate &c.), koja (an era), prakkadin (an almanack), which are not to be found at all.

I should mention in concluding that some Pali words are to be found in several forms, such as kammam kaṇ krammā, kāya kaiy, mag magga maggiṇ, sarup rup rupa arup, mit mettā, chit cheta, &c. The Burmese are fond also of using a Pali and Burmese word of the same signification to form a sort of aggregative compound.
E. g. mit-ehhue (friends), amin anā (an order), puṃ-sanṭhān (appearance), amhu kichcha (business), arap-desa (a place), anyak-dosa (anger), &c.

These well exemplify the way in which Pali has become interwoven with the common speech and thought of the people. A thorough knowledge of Burmese would necessitate some acquaintance with its Aryan alloy, and one could wish to see a dictionary or grammar undertaken with some recognition of this fact.

* This dropping of the “u” is very common in Burmese as pati ; pachchhui ; &c.
for puti ; puchchhui.
A peculiarity of the river names in Asam and some of the adjoining countries.—By S. E. Peal, Sibsagar, Asam.

Some years ago the prevalence of Di or Ti, as a prefix to river names in Asam, induced me to draw up a list of such, in the hope that some clue might be found that would explain the frequent recurrence of it.

It soon became evident that this Di, Ti, meant "water" in many of the hill dialects, and that the second part of the word was the true name of the river, in many cases descriptive; thus, the Tisa of the Naga hills means, Ti = water, Sa = young, the "young river."

Di and Ti were also frequently seen as a suffix; thus, Ai ti = mother water, Rapti, Tapti, Kampti &c.; occasionally softened to thi, as in Yung-thi, La-thi, Mu-thi.

More extended search revealed the peculiarity in most of the countries adjacent, with traces of it as far as western India. In the Naga hills, there are several variations, Ti, Tsi, Di, Dsu, and Chi, among Kacharies, Doi, Lushais Tui, and over the Malayan peninsula Tsi and Si, as in Si-tang, Si-múin, Sigún, although both Ti and Di also are occasionally met with.

In China we see it under various forms, as Tse, e.g. in Yang tse Kyang, and as Tsi, Tchi, Tchu, Sui and Chu, which latter is also so prevalent over Tibet, Chu being Tibetan for water. This latter is also common all along our northern frontier, "Lang chu" being in fact the upper Indus. Northwards, among the restricted Turanians, we get the Turki Su for water, and the Mongolian Us-su, no doubt related to the Tibetan Chu and Chinese Sui.

Following the course of the great Turki Mongolian invasions, from the north-east, we find this same word for water, more or less attached to rivers through Persia (as Sui) and Asia Minor (Siai, Soui, Su), emerging in European Turki as Su (there are two Kara-su rivers alone, falling into the gulf of Salonica, kara = black and su = water). Obviously these names are more or less of a generic character, the black water, the white water, &c., being common in most countries. Returning eastward to Asam, where the Di is so very prevalent, it is noteworthy that the Doi of the Asamese Kacharies seems related to the Da and Dah of the aboriginals of western Bengal and Central India. Passing westwards from Asam, we see the Tista, Di-pok, Di-onai, &c. in Bihar; Seti and Di-wa are also names of the Gogra; and Di-ngrai, a branch of the Arun in Nipal, is an almost exact repetition of the Ti-ngrai of eastern Asam.

Among the tributaries of the Ganges we have the Dioha, Rapti, and Gum-ti.* Again we have the Di-saun R. B. of the Bitwa (Jamna), the Narbada is the Kun-di, and we have the Tapti, Rapti, Dasti, Dire, &c. T is again met with, as the vernacular for water, among the tributaries of the upper Satlej and Indus, and used by hill tribes who do not seem to have had any communication, in the historic period, with the non-Aryans of Eastern Bengal. Jamuna = Jamuna or Di-a-muna of Ptolemy.*

* There is another Guati in Hill Tipperah.

In regard to the peculiarity under notice, it is evident that the Himalaya has acted as a conspicuous speech-parting. Starting from China, where we have Tse, Sui, and Chu, we get, via Tibet, Chu and Su alone, with their local variations, whereas to the south of the range, via Burma, Asam and India, we get the variations of Di, Ti, Thi, Dzu, Dui, Dah, which are as absent north of the Himalaya, as the Chu and Su are south of it, although to the east the two groups are connected by many intermediate forms.

The peculiarity in question gains importance from a knowledge of the fact that river names often survive the races who gave them. As Dr. Buchanan Hamilton has truly said, "the names of rivers and mountains "are those which are usually most carefully preserved among the changes "that take place in the languages of mankind."

It is not intended that these few remarks should be taken as an attempt to group non-Aryan races through a single word, but rather to invite a comparison between this peculiarity, as attached to river names, and the languages spoken in situ at the present day. In many cases the race giving the name has evidently departed, leaving, as in Asam and parts of Bengal, little else but these river names as evidence of former occupancy. This is specially noteworthy in a country quite destitute of architectural remains, like Asam and the hill country surrounding it. A careful study of such words as are likely to survive the races that originate them may lead to many unexpected proofs of that which is, so far, only surmised. It would also include the changes which such words or names systematically undergo at the hands of Aryan races, as where Su is rendered "Hur," or even "Eu," as in Eu-phrates.† The Indus is obviously the Ind-su, and we have it on many old maps as Ind-huh (h being s at each extremity of India); it is also rendered as Ind-suh. Non-Aryan names even seem to occur in Persia; Ak-su, literally white water, is found common all over Central Asia and as far west as European Turkey. Tested by the above, it looks more than probable that this is the source whence we derive "Oxus," one of the tributaries of that river, near its source, being Ak-su. I am, however, informed by a good authority that it comes from Waksh, also one of its sources. Possibly there may be less difference actually between the "ak-su" and "waksh," than at first sight appears.

* [Di appears to be merely the Greek way of spelling the Prákrit j (jamund) = Sanskrit y (yamund); see A. Cunningham's Ancient Geography of India, p. 46. Ed.]
† [The Assyrian hu (Greek eu) = Scythian hu "water"; see A. Cunningham, Ancient Geography, p. 37. Ed.]
"Kara-su," i.e. black water, is perhaps the commonest of this group of words (being also of a generic character). The name extends from the east of China to Turkey in Europe, and from Turkestan to the Arctic Ocean. A list of instances with Latitudes and Longitudes is given further on.

In Longitude they lie mainly between 21° 50' east and 60° east, while in Latitude the name occurs mainly between 35° N. and 45° N., a very restricted belt, corresponding with the Mongolian invasions westwards. Notwithstanding the fact that the whole of Central, Eastern, and Southern Asia, were probably originally peopled by non-Aryans, apparently spreading from China westward, it is noteworthy how effectually the Himalaya stood as a speech-parting, dividing the races spreading south of it from those to the north, even when tested by this one word for "water."

In studies of this kind much needless confusion has been caused by the very various modes of spelling adopted, ere the Hunterian system was introduced; the real name being often so disguised as to be barely seen. Indeed, in many cases we have boldly changed the original name for another, as when Ronnel turned the Ai-ti (mother water) into Barelly, simply because the former sounded to him absurd. The Amins also, who were with Buchanan, endeavoured to turn Tista into Trista or Tristota, and against the protest of the inhabitants. Carelessness has also had a great deal to do with the confusion we see, and the first mode of spelling that was chanced on remained, whether correct or no. Some rivers are spelt four or five different ways and at times as many as eight, and it is common to find the same river even on the same map spelt two different ways; thus we have Dee, De, Di, Dy interchangeable.

It must also be borne in mind that maps seldom give more than one name where there may be several well known locally to distinct tribes near. Thus Mbong-kha of the Singphüs is the Ti-keng of the Nagas. Dinoi of the Singphüs is Ning-thi of the Munipurs (the beautiful water), and it is Nam-tonai of the Shans and Kyendween or thanla wati of the Burmese. Probably it has also Naga names. Many rivers therefore may not at first sight seem to fall into the following list, that are yet very conspicuous, as the Dhansiri, but on investigation it turns out that the old name is nearly obsolete, i.e., the "Di-ma," whence Di-ma-pur. It is or was also called the Ti-mú.

In some cases again the name of the river is obviously recent, as the Godadhur, its true name being the Machú, chü being the Bhutan varia-

* I am not here in a position to follow out the word 'kara' (black) and trace its relationship to 'kala'; possibly it has been done, but if not, it would seem to offer an interesting and instructive case whereby we may possibly collate the non-Aryan languages with the Aryan. On the other hand it may simply have been imported from one to the other and modified later.
Peal—A peculiarity of the river names in Asam.

It is often difficult to spell Turanian words correctly and Tsi, which gives great trouble, is as common in those languages as it is rare in the Aryan groups. The river Tsik, tributary L. B. Namrup and Dihing, I find spelt by us as Chik, Chick, Seek, Tuseck, Ta-sheek, Cheek, and Tee-chick, and it is usually spelt Nam-chik, while on the spot it is clearly pronounced Tsik.

Sanpú and Singphú also would be as correctly rendered by Tsanpú and Tsingpho.

The difference between Di and Ti is often hardly perceptible, and at times nil, as Tirap, Dirap and Dihrap.

As the names of rivers are probably the last to change in any age or country, being frequently retained long after the originating language is extinct, as in America, the subject is of special interest where Aryan and non-Aryan races have evidently overlapped in times past, and might well repay systematic investigation. The following is a contribution, to which I would invite additions. It will be seen that the position is often not given. This is the second list compiled, and in the original one when the names were first collected the sites were not recorded.

LIST OF RIVER NAMES.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Di-a</th>
<th>Di-alung</th>
<th>Di-bong</th>
<th>Di-buru</th>
<th>Di-brú</th>
<th>Di-bru or Tiphú</th>
<th>Di-bú or Tiphú</th>
<th>Di-bú</th>
<th>Di-blai</th>
<th>Di-flú</th>
<th>Di-g</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>near Diwangiri</td>
<td>L. B.* Kaláng</td>
<td>N. E. Asam</td>
<td>N. Lakhimpur</td>
<td>there are 3 Dibrús</td>
<td>original name of the Kalang</td>
<td>near Samaguting</td>
<td>near Phungmai or Shuemai kha</td>
<td>R. B. Dinoi</td>
<td>E. Bihar</td>
<td>L. B. Brahmaputra, Mikir hills</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

* L. B. left bank, R. B. right bank, trib. tributary, &c.
S. E. Peal—A peculiarity of the river names in Assam.  [No. 4, 262

Di-ga R. B. Dinoi Up. Barma
Di-garu L. B. Dhansiri, Mikir hills Asam
Di-garung R. B. Dihing, Jaipur C. Asam
Di-gboi R. B. Brahmaputra, 89° Up. Asam
Di-gi Jiri Forest Asam
Di-gli R. B. Barák Cachar
Di-gmo Patkai
Di-grimo Silechar
Di-gum a name of Dhansiri
Di-grundi Khwang
Di-ha Burí, and No. Up. Asam
Di-hanji Kasi hills
Di-hang Burí, and No. East Up. Asam
Di-hing Burí, and No. North Up. Asam
Di-hong Burí, and No.
Di-hanji W. Bengal
Di-hri L. B. Disang, Sibsagar Up. Asam
Di-jiú N. Lakhimpur Up. Asam
Di-kalai
Di-kar Lat. 25° 49' N. Long. 94° 6' E. Asam
Di-karú R. B. Dialung, Mikir hills
Di-koi N. N. E. of Kapili and Direng
Di-kori
Di-krai N. E. No, Dwar C. Asam
Di-krang
Di-krengkong
Di-kung
Di-khou L. B. Brahmaputra Up. Asam
Di-has Balk
Di-hiri W. of Subansiri Up. Asam
Di-hri trib. of Pisola Up. Asam
Di-jung (Theobald's cat shells, p. 11) Up. Asam Di-khari Upper Dimo, Dihing Up. Asam
Di-kling or Di-mra Kopili, Asam
Di-khor W. Kamaikia C. Asam
Di-kra L. B. Kora Up. Asam
Di-khai L. B. Tingrai Up. Asam
Di-khúm L. B. Sessa Up. Asam
Di-khú Dyor, L. B. Dhansiri C. Asam
Di-kroi
1879.][S. E. Peal—A peculiarity of the river names in Asam. 263

Di-lai trib. Manás C. Asam
Di-li name of upper part, Disang Up. Asam Di-lih near Sibságar
Di-lí Mishmi hills
Di-ling Mishmi hills, Brahmakund
Di-len L. B. Indus Cabul Di-lkiri L. B. Brahmaputra, name of Kakadanga Up. Asam
Di-ma or Kali jan W. Duars Blutan
Di-ma a name of Dhansiri C. Asam
Di-mal L. B. Kalang
Di-mala
Di-mari
Di-mo R. B. Disang Up. Asam
Di-mri trib. Manás C. Asam
Di-nabi
Di-noi Up. Barma
Di-on No, Dihing Up. Asam
Di-oha L. B. Ganges Oude
Di-lail R. B. Indus, Lat. 35°30' Long. 40°74'E. Up. Asam
Di-mú N. Lakhimpur Nipal
Di-ngrai W. Branch, Arun S. India
Di-ndi Kistna Bihar
Di-onai Tista and Jamuna L. Asam
Di-pha R. B. Brahmaputra
Di-phi
Di-graph Nau gáon C. Asam
Di-pling R. B. Disáng Up. Asam
Di-pota Gábharu, char Dwar C. Asam
Di-pta R. B. Br. Tezpur C. Asam
Di-pok trib. Sonkosh Bihar
Di-phú trib. Kundíl, Bram Asam
Di-ra Kerim pani, Dihing Up. Asam
Di-reng R. B. Kapíli
Di-ri or bri into the Disola
Di-ri Brahmakund Up. Asam
Di-ro Jángí Naga hills
Di-rok No, Dihing Up. Asam
Di-roí R. B. Disáng Up. Asam
Di-rijmo Miri country Up. Asam
Di-sam L. B. Dihing
S. E. Peal—A peculiarity of the river names in Asam. [No. 4,

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>River Name</th>
<th>Description</th>
<th>Location</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Di-san</td>
<td>L. B. Brahmaputra</td>
<td>Bundelkund</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-sáng</td>
<td>the old Tista</td>
<td>Up. Asam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-pha</td>
<td>Lat. 31°, Long. 66°</td>
<td>Afghanistan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-ri</td>
<td>L. B. Subansiri</td>
<td>Up. Asam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-riú</td>
<td>R. B. Ronga Nadi</td>
<td>Up. Asam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-rpái</td>
<td>L. B. Subansiri</td>
<td>Up. Asam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-sáng</td>
<td>Up. Irawadi</td>
<td>Brahmaputra</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-sang</td>
<td>Pátkái</td>
<td>Asam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-snoi</td>
<td>Gáhharu, char Dwar</td>
<td>Asam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-soi</td>
<td>L. B. Brahmaputra</td>
<td>Up. Asam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-sem</td>
<td>R. B. Dhansiri</td>
<td>Up. Asam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-sarú</td>
<td>L. B. Jamuna</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-saún</td>
<td>R. B. Bitwa, R. B. Jumna</td>
<td>Bengal</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-sola</td>
<td>N. Sibságár</td>
<td>Up. Asam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-sú</td>
<td>Brahmakund</td>
<td>Up. Asam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-sún</td>
<td>Tengá páni</td>
<td>Up. Asam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-tori</td>
<td>Dee-tu-ree</td>
<td>C. Asam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-tóru</td>
<td>L. B. mouth Kalang</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-ula or Di-yula</td>
<td>old bed Manás</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-wa</td>
<td>the Gográ</td>
<td>Oude</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-yong</td>
<td>Kapili, N. Cachar</td>
<td>Cachar</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-yung</td>
<td>trib. Dhansiri or Doiyang</td>
<td>Naga hills</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-bái</td>
<td>Naga hills, Sibságár</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-bí</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-soi</td>
<td>R. B. Kundil</td>
<td>Up. Asam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-yak or Di-ak</td>
<td>Mahanadi</td>
<td>Bengal</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-vái</td>
<td>Naga hills</td>
<td>Up. Asam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-díng</td>
<td>Brahmakund</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-dlum</td>
<td>Yugli Pátkái</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-dlung</td>
<td>Yugli Pátkái</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-groi</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-keng</td>
<td>the Mbongkha Tirap, Dihing</td>
<td>Asam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-ka</td>
<td>Pátkái</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-ling</td>
<td>Yugli Pátkái</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-lhú</td>
<td>over Pátkái</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-loí</td>
<td>L. B. Dimo</td>
<td>Up. Asam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-mok</td>
<td>L. B. Disáng</td>
<td>Up. Asam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-mok</td>
<td>several</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-mú</td>
<td>a name of Dhansiri</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>River</td>
<td>Location</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-------</td>
<td>----------</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-mún</td>
<td>L. B. Disáng</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>? Ti-mún</td>
<td>several</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-nga</td>
<td>R. B. Dihing</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-ngrai</td>
<td>L. B. Disáng</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-ok</td>
<td>L. B. Brahmaputra</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-ka</td>
<td>trib. Di-bru</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-korai</td>
<td>into Di-roi</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-ka</td>
<td>several</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-pai</td>
<td>L. B. Dhansiri</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-pai</td>
<td>Sibságar</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-ping</td>
<td>Dihing</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-pling</td>
<td>Sankosh</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-psi</td>
<td>Tiráp</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-phu</td>
<td>near Moran</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-pú</td>
<td>Sibságar</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-pük</td>
<td>Wr. Jaipur</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-ráp</td>
<td>L. B. Dihing</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-ré</td>
<td>Sadiá</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-reh</td>
<td>Mikir Hills</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-ri</td>
<td>Sadiá</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-ri</td>
<td>Tiráp</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-rok</td>
<td>L. B. Dihing</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-róng</td>
<td>L. B. Safrai, L. B. Disáng</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-rú</td>
<td>L. B. Jhanji</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-rú or Chi-ru</td>
<td>trib. Tiok and Disáng</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-sá</td>
<td>trib. Disáng L. B.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-sáng</td>
<td>Disáng</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-sín</td>
<td>Tiok</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-sú</td>
<td>the Menga</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-sung</td>
<td>Naga hills</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-tulía</td>
<td>Bengal</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-wá</td>
<td>R. B. Dinoi</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ti-wáng</td>
<td>R. B. Dinoi</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tsi-tsi or Si-si</td>
<td>Abor hills</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

S. E. Peal—A peculiarity of the river names in Asam. 265
Tsi-k or Tsi-kha (Sing.) Nam chik, (Kampti) Tsi-khak
(Sing.) Kyoung (Burmese)
Tsi-ngkaú L. B. Irawadi Bamo, Barma
Tsi or Si-mún Siam
Si-bangi Siam
Si-gon Siam
Si-hinbum Siam
Si-ngum Siam
Si-tang or Thi thaung Siam
Si-la Lakhimpur Up. Asam
Ai-ti Barelly, Up. Manás Asam
Bag-ti Diyong-Dhansiri Asam
Gar-ti R. B. Brahmaputra, 89° Asam
Ti-si into Tiok Naga hills
Ti-sta Sikim Bengal
Ti-shui Lat. 29° 20' Long. 111° E. China
Si-ki trib. of Tsu Lat. 26° 27' Long. 118° China
Si-kiang Canton River
Ghal-ti
Gum-ti Near Lakhnau Oude
Gum-ti Hill Tipperah E. Bengal
Gulum-thi Mishmi hills
Das-ti Kistna
Dind-di Kistna
Dun-di Gulf of Katch
Du-ti
Jak-ti Ripú, Duar Baluchistan
Kun-di L. B. Narbada
N. W. Ceylon
Ku-ti Nam Kamti, Kamti hills Asam
Ku-ti Mishmi hills Borneo
La-thi Mishmi hills
Lan-di Peshawr Indus
Ling-ti Ladak
Milam-chi W. Kosi Nipal
M-thi Brahmakund
* Mú-thi Mishmi Hills
Ning-thi the Dinoi Up. Barma
Rap-ti L. B. Ganges Oude

* Moochoe or Ummpanee of Griffiths! see p. 120 "Selection of papers, relating to the Hill Tracts between Asam and Burma." B. S. Press.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>River Name</th>
<th>Location/Description</th>
<th>Region</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Ra-ti</td>
<td>Mishmi hills</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Runga-ti</td>
<td>Kandish, western India</td>
<td>Bihar</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shigol-thi</td>
<td>L. B. Dialang, Mikir hills</td>
<td>Asam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sung-ti or thi</td>
<td>Ghogra</td>
<td>W. Nipal</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tap-ti</td>
<td>Lake Van</td>
<td>Asia Minor</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thi-kak</td>
<td>L. B. Dialang, Mikir hills</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Se-ti</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ben-di</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bulá-ti</td>
<td>Lat. 26°, N. Long. 63° E.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chider-ti</td>
<td>&quot; 52° &quot; 73°</td>
<td>Lena L. B.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ulen-ti</td>
<td>&quot; 52° &quot; 72°</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ug-ti</td>
<td>&quot; 14° &quot; 112°</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-jil-eh</td>
<td>the Tigris</td>
<td>Baghdad</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Di-ya-la</td>
<td>trib. L. B. Tigris</td>
<td>Siberia</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yeve-si</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sar (ju chu)</td>
<td>the Ghogra</td>
<td>Bihar</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Du-ra</td>
<td>E. Monas</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Du-ba</td>
<td>Sonkosh</td>
<td>Lukhi Duar</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dui-ola</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rang-ti</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ghar-ti</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mur-ti</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rai-ti</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Soi-ti</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kal-ti</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gal-ti</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yang-tsi</td>
<td>begins as Minac-chú</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Much-kun-di</td>
<td>W. of India</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>? Lau-tsa or tsu</td>
<td>Cambodia or Mi-khong</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wáshis-ti</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yung-thi</td>
<td>R. B. No, Dihing</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pi-ti</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chom-tehu</td>
<td>the Arun of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sabarma-ti</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ay-ya-wa-di</td>
<td>Irawadi</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ingdi</td>
<td>Sadia</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bag-mu-ti</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gangu-ti</td>
<td>Alti hills</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bhag-ra-ti</td>
<td>the big water</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shung-chu</td>
<td>L. B. Upper Indus</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>River Name</td>
<td>Translation</td>
<td>Location</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>------------</td>
<td>-------------</td>
<td>----------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Champa-muti</td>
<td>R. B. Brahmaputra the Múti</td>
<td>Bhutan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lopra-cha-chú</td>
<td>the Subansiri</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ha-su-ti</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nari-chú</td>
<td>the Sanpú</td>
<td>Herat</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Haut-mo-ti</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Huri-arius-arisu</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Horing-o-ti</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Isa-mo-té</td>
<td>near the Champa-muté</td>
<td>Bhutan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lai-mo-té</td>
<td></td>
<td>Nipal</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mar-chang-di</td>
<td>trib. Indravati</td>
<td>Godavery</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mar-kum-di</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sam-po-na-ti</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sa-lun-di</td>
<td>Satpura, Gunga</td>
<td>Katak</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Surati</td>
<td></td>
<td>C. India</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sur-so-ti</td>
<td>Tonk</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Zih-di</td>
<td>S. E. of Samarkand, trib. Oxus</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dyardenes</td>
<td>Brahmaputra, as known to the ancients</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chú</td>
<td>Lat. 33° 30' N.</td>
<td>Long. 115° E.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sin-shui</td>
<td>&quot; 27°</td>
<td>&quot; 109°</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tsin-chui</td>
<td>&quot; 36°</td>
<td>&quot; 112° 30</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chi-chui</td>
<td>&quot; 28°</td>
<td>&quot; 106°</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shwui R.</td>
<td>&quot; 38° 30'</td>
<td>&quot; 108°</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tsing-chooi</td>
<td>&quot; 37°</td>
<td>&quot; 106°</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>He-shui</td>
<td>&quot; 33°</td>
<td>&quot; 105°</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>He-shwi</td>
<td>&quot; 32°</td>
<td>&quot; 103°</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kui-chui</td>
<td>&quot; 35°</td>
<td>&quot; 109°</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tsú R.</td>
<td>&quot; 26°</td>
<td>&quot; 119°</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Si-ki</td>
<td>&quot; 26°</td>
<td>&quot; 118°</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Si-ri</td>
<td>&quot; 26°</td>
<td>&quot; 112°</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Choo-chew</td>
<td>&quot; 27°</td>
<td>&quot; 110°</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qui-shoo</td>
<td>&quot; 26°</td>
<td>&quot; 112° 30'</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hong-chui</td>
<td>&quot; 25°</td>
<td>&quot; 106°</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pe-shi</td>
<td>L. B. Mikong or Cambodia</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ho-Ti</td>
<td>Lat. 23°</td>
<td>Long. 103°</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shoo</td>
<td>&quot; 28° 30'</td>
<td>&quot; 115°</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Different forms of the Words, Tsi-chui-chü found in China, as per maps of recent date.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>Tchi</th>
<th>Chi</th>
<th>Shi</th>
<th>Tsze</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Si</td>
<td>Chui</td>
<td>Chooi</td>
<td>Shwi</td>
<td>Shwui</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tsi</td>
<td>Chui</td>
<td>Chooi</td>
<td>Shwi</td>
<td>Shoo</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chi</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shi</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tsze</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

List of Rivers named Kara su "black water" and Ak su "white water."

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>River</th>
<th>Longitude 1</th>
<th>Latitude 1</th>
<th>Longitude 2</th>
<th>Latitude 2</th>
<th>Location</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Kara su</td>
<td>41° 30'</td>
<td>21° 50'</td>
<td>22°</td>
<td></td>
<td>Gulf of Salonica.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kara su</td>
<td>40° 20'</td>
<td>23° 10'</td>
<td>24° 30'</td>
<td></td>
<td>Do.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kara su</td>
<td>35° 20'</td>
<td>37°</td>
<td>34°</td>
<td></td>
<td>Contessa.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kara su</td>
<td>35° 30'</td>
<td>48°</td>
<td>49°</td>
<td></td>
<td>Gagos.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kara su</td>
<td>35° 40'</td>
<td>53° 30'</td>
<td>Caspian East Bay.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kara su</td>
<td>22° 30'</td>
<td>65° 72'</td>
<td>Kirghis steppe.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kara tsu</td>
<td>41°</td>
<td>69°</td>
<td>Taskent.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kara su</td>
<td>37° 30'</td>
<td>25° 30'</td>
<td>Asia Minor.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kara su</td>
<td>35° 30'</td>
<td>35° 30'</td>
<td>Asia Minor.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kara su</td>
<td>35° 40'</td>
<td>40° 30'</td>
<td>Upper Euphrates.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kara su</td>
<td>33° 40'</td>
<td>41° 30'</td>
<td>Upper Euphrates.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kara tsu</td>
<td>33°</td>
<td>33°</td>
<td>China.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kara tsu</td>
<td>32° 40'</td>
<td>27° 30'</td>
<td>West Coast Black Sea.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ak su</td>
<td>37° 30'</td>
<td>31°</td>
<td>Gulf of Salatia.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ak su</td>
<td>37° 20'</td>
<td>37°</td>
<td>Upper Euphrates.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ak su</td>
<td>43°</td>
<td>74°</td>
<td>Into Chu River.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ak su</td>
<td>35°</td>
<td>74°</td>
<td>Upper Oxus.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ak su</td>
<td>42° 30'</td>
<td>75° 20'</td>
<td>Lake Issykul.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ak su</td>
<td>46°</td>
<td>78° 20'</td>
<td>Lower Dengiz.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Words for "Water" in the following Languages.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Language</th>
<th>Equivalent</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Lushai</td>
<td>Tui</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kumi</td>
<td>Tui, or Tooi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mru</td>
<td>Tui</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kuki of Cachar</td>
<td>Tui</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Do. of Tipperah</td>
<td>Tui</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hamali of do.</td>
<td>Tui</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Do. of Cachar</td>
<td>Tui</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Naga of Oboepore</td>
<td>Ti</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Do. of Sibsagar</td>
<td>Ti</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Do. of Haimong</td>
<td>chu</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Do. of Hatiguria</td>
<td>a chi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Do. of Miklai</td>
<td>a chin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manipuri</td>
<td>Ising</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Singphu</td>
<td>Insin or Ntsin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Auganú Naga</td>
<td>Dzu</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daiła</td>
<td>Esi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Núri</td>
<td>a tse</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abor</td>
<td>a se</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>S. Mishmi</td>
<td>M’ji</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>D do.</td>
<td>M’ji</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Songhtu, Burma</td>
<td>(H) tee</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Poi</td>
<td>Te</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Telain of Pegu</td>
<td>Dik</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sonthali (Pergs.)</td>
<td>Dak</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mundari C. N.</td>
<td>Daa</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Juang, Orissa</td>
<td>Dak</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kol Singbhúm</td>
<td>Da</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bhunú</td>
<td>Da</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sonthali of Manbhum</td>
<td>Da</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nimar</td>
<td>Da</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mehta, Bilaspur,</td>
<td>Dab</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mech</td>
<td>Daee</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cuch</td>
<td>Tika ti</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magar, Nipal</td>
<td>Di</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chipeng ”</td>
<td>Ti &amp; Di</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vayu ”</td>
<td>Ti</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gara</td>
<td>si</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kachari</td>
<td>Doi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hojai</td>
<td>Di</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Turki</td>
<td>sú</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tibetan</td>
<td>chú</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bhutéa of Towang</td>
<td>Sie</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Do. of Lo, East</td>
<td>echie</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mongolian</td>
<td>usú</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chinese</td>
<td>(soi, shui)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(chui, chú)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Bulandshahr Antiquities.—By F. S. Growse, C. S., M. A., Oxon, C. I. E.

With a Note by Dr. Rájendralála Mitra, Ráj Bahadur, C. I. E.

(With three Plates.)

The small town of Bulandshahr in the N. W. P. was selected in the year 1824 as the capital of a district, simply on account of its convenient central position. Since then it has thriven and increased greatly both in extent and population, though still of much less commercial importance than the flourishing mart of Khurja, some ten miles distant, which has the further advantage of being a station on the main line of the East India Railway. Its modern Muhammadan title of Buland-shahr (Higham) has been given to it in consequence of the great height of the artificial hill, on which stood the old Fort overlooking the stream of the Kálindi. This river is a tributary of the Jamuná and is commonly known by Munshís and European officials as the Káli-Nádi, the origin of the corruption being, that the two words are indistinguishable from one another when written in Persian characters, and Káli Nádi or ‘Black River’ suggests a more readily intelligible meaning than the Sanskrit patronymic Kálindi. The older Hindí name of the town was Baran, which is still retained as the designation of the Pargana. Of its early history there are no written records, and little or nothing upon which implicit reliance can be placed has been preserved by oral tradition. Gold coins, however, bearing Greek and Páli inscriptions of the Bactrian dynasty, used to be not unfrequently washed down in the rains among the debris from the high ground of the old city,* and sufficiently attest that the place at that remote period was one of considerable wealth and importance.

According to tradition the founder was a Tomar Rájá, by name Parmál, in whose time and for several generations later the town was called Banchati. One of his successors, Rájá Ahibaran (‘the cobra-coloured,’ as his name is popularly interpreted), is said to have been the first to give his capital the name of Baran, intending thereby to perpetuate the memory of his own name. This appears to me very doubtful, or rather I might say plainly is obviously incorrect. Baran is certainly not the Sanskrit word varna ‘colour,’ but varana, ‘a hill fort or enclosure;’ and Ahibaran might thus mean ‘snake-fort’ or ‘Nága-fort,’ in the same way as the more famous Ahi-kshetra† means ‘snake-land.’ No Rájá Ahibaran, I should conjecture, ever existed, but the town may well have derived its name from being a stronghold of the Nága tribe.

Another explanation is, however, possible. Some twenty-one miles to the north-east of Bulandshahr, on the right bank of the Ganges, is the small town of Ahár, which (according to local tradition) is the spot where, after Paríkshit, the successor of Rájá Yudhishthír on the throne of Has-tinápur, had met his death by snake-bite, his son Janamejaya, to avenge his father’s death, performed a sacrifice for the destruction of the whole serpent race. Though still accounted the capital of a Pargana, it is a miserably poor and decayed place with a population, according to the last census, of only 2,414. It is evidently, however, a site of great antiquity. Part of it has been washed away by the river, but heaps of brick and other traces of ruin still extend over a large area, and I found lying about in the streets several fragments of stone sculpture of early date. The two best I brought away with me to Bulandshahr, as also a once fine but now terribly mutilated round pillar, which I dug up on the very verge of the high cliff overlooking the river. This is specially noticeable as having its base encircled with a coil of serpents, which would seem to corroborate the connection of the local name with the word ahi, ‘a snake.’ The principal residents of the town are Nágár Bráhmanás by descent, though—since the time of Aurangzeb—Muhammadans by religion, who believe that their ancestors were the priests employed by Janamejaya to conduct his sacrifice, and that in return for their services they had a grant of the township and the surrounding villages. Immediately after this event it is said that the Pândavas transferred their seat of local government from Ahár to Baran, and it may be that they then first attached the prefix ahi to the name of the town—so making it Ahibaran—in order to commemorate the circumstances of the migration. This would imply that the town was already in existence; and it might with much plausibility be identified with the Varanávata,* mentioned in the 143rd chapter of the first Book of the Mahábhárat.

* The side of the hill where they used to be washed down in the rains was not long ago built up with masonry, to prevent any further cutting away. [See note, p. 272. Ed.]
† [Commonly Ahi-chhatra or “Snake-canopy,” which appears to be the correct form; see A. Cunningham, Anc. Geogr. of India, p. 369. Ed.]

All this, however, is conjectural and refers to a period so remote, nearly 1400 years before Christ, that no tangible record of it could be expected to survive to the present day. To come down to somewhat later times: the Bactrian dynasty, which flourished in the centuries immediately preceding our era, and the Gupta dynasty that succeeded it, have both left traces behind them in their coins;† the second also in a copper-plate inscription that will be mentioned further on. When the Tomars of Kanauj extended their sovereignty over all Upper India, it may be that the legendary Parmál ruled under them at Baran; but at the time of Mahmúd’s invasion, in 1017, when Kanauj was still the capital, and Delhi in all probability had not yet been re-built, Baran was certainly the seat of a Dor Rájá, by name Hardatt, who—as stated in the Tárikh-i-Yamini—averted its threatened destruction by professing to be a convert to Islám. His dominion extended at least as far as Merath and Kol, for at each of those places he had a fort, for which he paid a large ransom in money and elephants. Indeed from traditions extant at other localities it would seem that the Dor Rájá of Baran was the head of all that clan, which for about two centuries supplied rulers for the whole of the territory included in the present districts of Merath, Aligárh, and Bulandshahr, with parts of Murádábád, Mathurá and Eta. When Kol was finally reduced by the Muhammadans in the reign of Násir-uddín Mahmúd (1246-1265 A. D.), it was under a Dor Rájá, and the tower, which was wantonly destroyed by the local authorities in 1860, is generally supposed to have been erected in 1274 A. D. on the site of the principal temple of the old city. Among the

* General Cunningham, however, proposes to identify with the Varanávata of the Mahábhárata a village now called Barnáwa, in the Merath district. It has not yet been explored and it is therefore uncertain whether it is really an ancient site or not.

† [Two copper coins of Su-Hermaeus (Kadphises), one gold coin of Chandra Gupta II, and one gold coin of a dynasty intermediate between the Guptas and the Indo-scythians, presented by Mr. Growse, and now in the Society’s Cabinet, were found on the hill side, mentioned on p. 271. See Proceedings, A. S. B. for June, 1878. Ed.]
INSCRIPTION FROM BULANDSHAHR
(from a photograph)
INSCRIPTION FROM BULANDSHAHR
(from a photograph)
Hindus, however, the tradition is somewhat different. They ascribe it to the Dor Rájá Mangal Sen, who gave his daughter Padmavati in marriage to the heir of Rájá Bhím of Mahrára and Étáwa, who soon after his accession was murdered by his younger brothers. The widow then retired to Kol, where her father built the tower for her: and possibly the Muhammadans may only have altered and added to it, to make it suit their own requirements. At Noh-khera in the Jalesar Pargana, which is now included in the Éta district, there is a tradition of a Rájá Bhím, who may possibly have been the person abovemented; and at Noh-jhil in Mathurá are the remains of a temple, converted into a darjákh, which is said to have been originally built by one of the Dor Rájás of Kol. The capital had been transferred there, from Jalálí, by Mangal Sen's father, Buddh Sen. This latter was the son of Bijay Rám (brother of Dasarátáh Siñh, who built the Fort at Jalesar) the son of Náhar Siñh (the founder of the Sambhal Fort) the son of Gobind Siñh, who was the son of Mukund Sen, the son of Rájá Vikram Sen of Baran.

In 1194, the last of the Dor rulers of Baran, Rájá Chandra Sen, was killed while defending the fort against the army of Shaháb-uddin Muhammad Ghori. Before he fell, an arrow from his bow had slain one of the leaders of the Muhammadan forces, called Khwája Lál Ali, who is still revered as a martyr under the popular appellation of Lál Baraní. The site of his tomb is shown across the Kálindí, some 900 yards from the town, and it is from there that I brought the stone bearing the two inscriptions shown in the accompanying Plates VIII and IX. It is a singularly shaped block, being 2 ft. 5 in. long, 10 in. broad and 10 in. thick. The inscriptions are opposite one another, on the two long sides. It could not have been intended to set up the stone anywhere as it is, for it is difficult to imagine a position in which the two sides could be conveniently read, and it is also evident that preparations had been made for splitting the stone at half its thickness into two slabs. As the letters are of different sizes, it could not have been meant to join the two pieces together, and it is possible that they may have no connection with one another. The one begins with the invocation, Om. Name Bhagavate Vásudeváya, and in the first line may also be read the words Kaválo nídrayá militákshah sanáyah.....prabala-kala-kara. In the first line on the reverse is apparently given the date, 1183. I fear that the obliteration is too extensive to allow of much information being elicited from what remains, even if it can be read. But I send it for publication in the Journal, where antiquaries may have an opportunity of seeing it; and, as it may throw some light upon its subject, I have put together the above brief sketch of the history of the locality where the stone was found.

As might have been expected from its nearness to Delhi, the Muhammadans have long since made a clean sweep of the district and razed to the ground every building, whether secular or religious, that had been erected by its former Hindu rulers. I have now been over every part of it, and the few fragments shown in the accompanying Plate X are positively the sum total of all the antiquities that I have noticed. The six short pillars are of the mediaeval Hindu period and may be ascribed to one of the Dor Rájás, about the year 1000 A. D. They had been buried under the steps of a small mosque on the highest part of the old town of Bulandshahr. In digging the foundations of a house on the opposite side of the same street was found the curious stone sculptured with three miniature temples. These are of different design, and if found separately, I might have been inclined to refer them to different architectural periods. But similar forms may be seen in conjunction on the front of the temples at Khajuráho, which are known to be of the tenth century A. D., and the very archaic type of one of these designs must be attributed to religious conservatism. The high mediaeval column is one of a pair found a few years ago on the margin of what was formerly a large masonry tank outside the walls, said to have been constructed by Rájá Hardatt, or one of his descendants. The companion column was sent off to Merath, 40 miles away, by the Muhammadan gentleman into whose possession it had come, to be worked up into a house he was building there. The one shown in the plate I rescued from his stables, where it had been thrown down on the ground and was used by his grass-cutters to sharpen their tools on. The circular pillar with the coil of human-headed snakes at the base is, as already mentioned, from Ahár; as also the mediaeval door-jamb and the block, that supports it, carved with rows of temple façades in the style of the Násik caves. This last is probably the oldest of the group. The second door-jamb found in the courtyard of the mosque at Bulandshahr is comparatively modern. More intimate local knowledge may possibly bring to light a few other ancient remains, but they are not likely to be numerous; for stone, which had to be brought from a considerable distance, has always been very sparingly used in the neighbourhood, while brick is a material, which however well worked must ordinarily cease to possess either interest or beauty when reduced to ruin. The only other ancient inscription, of which I have heard as belonging to the district, is the one of which a transcript and translation by Dr. Rájendraláá Mitra were given in Vol. XLIII of the
As. Society’s Journal. This is dated in the reign of Skanda Gupta, in the year 146, which, if the Sáka era is intended, would correspond with 224 A. D. It was dug up at the village of Indor, in a khera of unusual elevation and extent, which adjoins the high road between Anúpsahr and Aligarh, about 10 miles from the former town. In the inscription
BULANDSHAHR ANTIQUITIES
(from a photograph)
the name of the village is given as Indrapúrá; and, by a curious coincidence, the very same Number of the Journal contained an article of mine on local etymology, in which I had demonstrated, by an application of the rules of the Prákrit Grammarian, Vararuci, that a Sanskrit word, such as Indrapúrá must, in the natural course of phonetic decay, become Indor in the modern dialect. On the opposite, that is, the western side of the district, there is an almost continuous succession of deserted kheras, along the bank of the Jamuná, from the village of Begamábád to the town of Dankor, a distance of about 20 miles. The most southern of these is called Hastaur, which is strikingly suggestive of Hastinápúr, an off-shoot perhaps from that ancient capital; while another, as Rájá Lakshman Sińha informs me, goes by the name of Kúpsar. Begamábád is quite of modern origin, having been founded by the Begam Samrú of Sárdhana; but Dankor is an ancient site and is supposed to derive its name from Drona, the tutor of the young princes of Hastinápúr. He has a tank and temple in the town still called after him, Dronachár. In the course of the next cold season I hope to visit all these kheras.

Note by Dr. Rájendralála Mitra.

The inscriptions are so extensively obliterated that it is impossible to deduce from them connected narratives. No. 1 comprises 10 lines, every one of which has two or three lacunæ, and several doubtful letters, but from what remains the purport of the document is clear enough, a grant of land for the worship of a divinity whose name is not apparent. The land was bounded on the west by Chhandi — ? on the south by Bhijali-bháta; on the north by a field named Mahardiva — . The donors were a great commander (mahásámanta) named Srí Vadana, who was a Nága rájá and son of Amrīta rájá, and one Nárāyaṇa, son of a householder and banker named Bháshviká. The date is some undecypherable day in the waxing moon of the month of S'rávaṇḍ (July—August) of the Samvat year 1180 = 1224 A. D. of which the words as'īti adhikeshu “eighty above” are distinct. The first and second figures I read doubtfully. The last two lines contain imprecatory Puranic verses against resumption of grants of land. I annex a transcript of the portion legible to me.

No. 2 is also a deed of gift and is dated on the 5th of the month of S'rávaṇḍ of some undecypherable year. It was granted by an “Adhirája” or paramount sovereign, but his name is lost. A transcript of the few words that are legible to me is annexed.

Mr. Growse is quite right in supposing the two records to be unconnected with each other, though the month of the date is the same. The stone was not intended to be set up anywhere, but to be preserved in the archives of the temple as a title-deed.
No. 1.

१। संवत्सरैकादशीयु (?) अवशीति व्यवस्थित—आवश्यकता युक्तचः
२। — महासामन्त श्रीवदन श्रीमत्वराजपुर वाधार्थिक विषयक प्रश्नसूति—
३। लक्ष्मण पुत्र श्रीनारायण ?—कर्मीय प्रसन्नच वैद्यर्मूमी ग्रहंतवा वादिताना छात्र भारतीयाना—
४। वच्चि परिवर्तितभागमः क्षणी—
५। भज्जीवांि द्वितीय—मरुदर्वा नामचत्र युन यु—
६। +उससे भुज्जवत्ता पारस्—छत्र वैद्यर्मूमी खां श्री + +
७। श्री—देवस्व घृजायथ श्रीवदन श्रीनारायणाः श्रीमोहनसुध्दमान वडज्जवरेश्च ठ—
८। नन्दजज्वरेश्च कुशीवांि उत्तरेः द्वीपविमयुता सत्क वर्णमान भि—
९। वज्जिर्वर्मसुधामुक्ता राजमभि समाजदिधि भि। यथा यथा यदा मृति तथा तदा फलं। यथीवर्मसहस्तिरिणी श्रमं + + मेदि
१०। मृतिदेवि उद्भवावमन्यथा च—

No. 2.

१। त्रिं स्त्री० भगवती वासुरेवाय॥ वच्च प्रान्ती प्रशान्ति श्रीविनितल कवलो भिन्नया मीनिताच्। बैनया: श्रुलिप्रसान्तबल कल्याण—
२। श्रीविनि यशस्व पा विशालिते आवश्यक प्रवृत्तान्
३। धीराजा श्री—
४। ——बहुन्यावसीनस्यानु द्वाराति—
५। ——इन्द्रुमती—
६। ——मन्त्रायं मातापि—
७। ——श्रीविनित्यायायान—
८। ——छात्रेवत्तु
The Copper Coins of the old Mahárájás of Kashmir.—By C. J. Rodgers.

(With two Plates.)

Some years ago General Cunningham wrote for the Numismatic Society of London, of which he is a most distinguished and worthy member, a Paper on "The Ancient Coinage of Kashmir." That paper is now out of print, and as it was written 36 years ago, the present generation cannot obtain it. It identifies "no less than 18 Rájás of Kashmir extending from Toramána to Jaga Deva, who reigned from about A. D. 500 to 1200." In the present paper I propose to cover less ground and to start with Avanti Vermá or Adityá Vermá, the first Mahárájá of the Utpala Dynasty, which commences from the year 875 A. D. The coins are all from my own cabinet. In the majority of instances where I have duplicates I have chosen that coin for my plates, which has the greatest number of legible letters on it. The accessories which are very interesting have been made to give way to this, as I regard the identification of the coin as of primary importance.

As yet I have come across only two silver coins of any of these Mahárájás. They are of Didda, who was a Maharáni, and of Kalasa. These two coins are of much finer execution than any of the copper ones. The reverses have different letters on them. Nothing but photographs of them would do them justice. I reserve them therefore for a separate notice. They are round, but thicker than the copper coins and are much less worn. The silver coins of the Sultáns of Kashmir are square. General Cunningham informs me that he has two gold coins of Harsha. I believe they are the only gold coins known to exist of any one of the old Kashmir rulers.

The following is the list of the rájás as given in Prinsep's Tables.—(Those kings whose coins are in this paper are in italics.)

Utpala Dynasty.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>A. D.</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>875</td>
<td>Adityá or Avanti Vermá.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>904</td>
<td>Sankara Vermá.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>922</td>
<td>Gopala Vermá.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

* I am much indebted to General Cunningham for help in reading the coins of the Mahárájás. My cabinet contains several not before published both in the Sultáns and Mahárájás. I have several older coins, such as Vasukal, Milukal, Pratápáditya, Vininyá, Durlabachá.
Sankata.
924. Sugandha Rani.
926. Partha.
941. Nirjita Verma.
942. Chakra Verma.
952. Sura Verma.
953. Partha, a second time.
954. Chakra, a second time.
954. Sankara Verdhana.
956. Chakra Verma, a third time.
957. Unmatti Verma.
959. Sura Verma, a second time.

Last or Mixed Dynasty.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Ruler</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>960</td>
<td>Yaskara Deva</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>969</td>
<td>Sangrama Deva</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>969</td>
<td>Parvagupta</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>971</td>
<td>Kshemagupta</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>979</td>
<td>Abhimanyu</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>993</td>
<td>Nandigupta</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>994</td>
<td>Tribhuvana</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>996</td>
<td>Bhimagupta</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1001</td>
<td>Didda Rani</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1024</td>
<td>Sangrama Deva</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1032</td>
<td>Ananta Deva</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1054</td>
<td>Kalasa</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1062</td>
<td>Harsha</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1062</td>
<td>Udayama Vikrama</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1072</td>
<td>Sanka Raja</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1072</td>
<td>Sallha</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1072</td>
<td>Sussala</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1088</td>
<td>Mallina</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1088</td>
<td>Jaya Siha</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1110</td>
<td>Paramana</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1119</td>
<td>Bandi Deva</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1126</td>
<td>Bopya Deva (?)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1135</td>
<td>Jasu Deva</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1153</td>
<td>Jaga Deva, &amp;c. &amp;c.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The list goes on to 1298. But I have no coins of later kings than Jaga Deva. It will be seen, however, that out of these two lists alone I have given the coins of 19 kings. I have given another coin which reads Java Deva Deva. This must be a coin of a king who reigned near to the time of Jaga Deva. He must be either an usurper or a man who is known to history under some other name. I give with some diffidence another coin. I attribute it to Bopya Deva. Of this man it is written that his folly exceeded all bounds. The historians give us the following specimen of his lack of sense, which after all might have come from the banks of the Shannon. One day Bopya was taking his ease on the river. Looking over the side of the boat he saw a reflection of himself in the water. He smiled. The reflection smiled. He grew angry. It grew angry. At once he threw a stone which I suppose disturbed the water and disposed of the mimic for the time. On looking at his finger Bopya discovered that he had lost his ring. Nothing disconcerted he took his stick and threw it on the running stream and ordered the boatmen to row home. Arrived there he ordered his servants to go and bring his ring telling them that he had put his stick on the water where it fell. One is reminded on reading this of the Irishman who dropped the ship's tea-kettle overboard in Dublin harbour. He cut a mark in the side of the ship where it fell. When the ship arrived off Cork, he asked the Captain whether if anything were lost he knew where it was? We may imagine the answer. Pat said, "Well, you know the tay kettle is at the bottom of Dublin harbour, and the ship's side has a mark on it to enable us to judge where it fell."

I regret that up to the present I have seen no coin of Ratangiri who is said to have been the first Sultan of Kashmir. He was a second Solomon. One day two mares foaled. The foal of one died. The foal of the other took to both mares with equal affection. The owners could not tell whose foal had died and whose was the living foal. They came to Ratangiri. He ordered them to throw the living foal from a bridge into the water, the mare that followed it was to be adjudged the mother.

Of Yaskara it is written that in his days thieves and highwaymen were nowhere to be seen. Shops and houses were left open at night. It seems a pity that this king, whose rule was as effective as that of our own Alfred who preceded him by only half a century, should have seen fit to leave the scene he had graced so long, to hide himself like a second Charles V. in a monastery, or rather I expect in some jungle as an ascetic.

Now for a few words about the coins themselves. Both obverse and reverse have crowned figures on them. The figure on the obverse is probably that of the king. But the face is in nearly every case more like that of an ass or bullock. There are large earrings in every instance. Round the waist are apparently two bands. The waist compared with the shoulders and chest is very thin. Mountaineers to the present day wear a rope round the waist. This figure is always seated, the legs being disposed of in a peculiar fashion. Sometimes they are hidden in the skirts, sometimes bare, and in one case the ankles have anklets on them (see figs. 22 and 24). The name comes on the obverse, and is generally divided into two parts by the figure. Sometimes Śrī is present on the left of the figure and the name commences on the right. Sometimes Śrī and part of the name are to the left and the remainder of the name to the right. Sometimes Śrī is omitted and the name occupies both sides of the figure. The figure has a canopy over the crown. This is shown very well in some specimens of Jaga Deva, lately obtained from a heap of about two hundred. (See figs. 23, 24.)

The reverse has a figure crowned. But the earrings give way to four dots which may represent jewels in the ear as worn by women. This figure is standing. The skirts are arranged peculiarly. The drawers resemble the broad and flowing drawers worn by women. The skirts are about as high as the knee. The legs are in some cases visible, with ties of an immense size to the boots; in other cases the legs seem to be naked. The waist is supported by a cross belt. The right hand contains a wreath. The left hand holds a trident or lotus. The shoulders seem to be covered with a cape which sticks out very much like epaulettes. The left hand side of the coin generally has a circle of dots in it, over the right hand side of the figure. On the right hand side of the figure the remnants of the titles and names are generally found, under the left arm, such as verma, gupta, deva, vijay. In one case the d of deva comes on the left hand side of the coin.

I have not as yet been able to trace anything like a sign approaching to a date on any coin.

In scarcely any case is there any difficulty about the identification of the coin; the names are very easily made out.

Many of the coins have several types. The coins of Gopala, Jaya Siña, Sussala, Jaga Deva are of several kinds. The last mentioned, however, has the most. In only one case have I come across a smaller coin than the ones in the plates. The coin I have is evidently a half of whatever these coins were called. It is one of Kalasa's.

Having given so much by way of preface, I now give a table of the coins represented in Plates XI and XII, showing exactly the inscription on each coin and its position, whether on the right or left of the obverse or reverse figure. In every case I speak of the right and left of the coin after the usual numismatic fashion. When speaking of the figure of course the right hand of the figure is on the left of the coin and vice versa.
COINS OF THE MAHARAJAHS OF KASHMIR.
COINS OF THE MAHARAJAHS OF KASHMIR.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>No. of Figure</th>
<th>Kings' Names</th>
<th>Obverse Inscriptions</th>
<th>Reverse Inscriptions</th>
<th>Remarks</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Left.</td>
<td>Right.</td>
<td>Left.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1</td>
<td>Avanti, ............</td>
<td>ब</td>
<td>व</td>
<td>देव</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2</td>
<td>Sankara,.............</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>व मं</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>Gopala, .............</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>ब मं</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>Sugandha, ...........</td>
<td>बी</td>
<td>लु गंव</td>
<td>व देव</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>Yaskara,...............</td>
<td>भ</td>
<td>ख</td>
<td>देव</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>Dikshema,............</td>
<td>दि</td>
<td>बी स</td>
<td>गु प</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>Abhimanyu, ..........</td>
<td>भ</td>
<td>जि म स</td>
<td>गु प</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>Nandigupta, .........</td>
<td>ब</td>
<td>निदिग</td>
<td>प</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>Tribhuvana, ..........</td>
<td>जि</td>
<td>भु व</td>
<td>गु प</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>Bhimagupta, ..........</td>
<td>भो</td>
<td>स मु</td>
<td>प</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>Didda Rani, ..........</td>
<td>भो</td>
<td>दिं ह</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>Sangrama, ............</td>
<td>ब</td>
<td>लज्जर</td>
<td>अ देव</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13</td>
<td>Ananta, .............</td>
<td>ब</td>
<td>ज्जर</td>
<td>अ देव</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14</td>
<td>Kalasa, .............</td>
<td>च</td>
<td>रज्जर</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15</td>
<td>Harsha, ..............</td>
<td>च</td>
<td>रज्जर</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16</td>
<td>Sussala, ............</td>
<td>द्व</td>
<td>ज्जर</td>
<td>अ देव</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17</td>
<td>Jaya Siñha, ..........</td>
<td>ज ब</td>
<td>जि ड</td>
<td>त ब</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18</td>
<td>Paramána, ............</td>
<td>भी प</td>
<td>र म</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19</td>
<td>Jaga Deva,...........</td>
<td>अ व</td>
<td>ग</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20</td>
<td>Java Deva,...........</td>
<td>अ व</td>
<td></td>
<td>देव</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21</td>
<td>Bopya Deva,..........</td>
<td>भ*</td>
<td>द ब</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22</td>
<td>Not identified, ......</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>23</td>
<td>Jaga Deva,...........</td>
<td>ज ब</td>
<td>ग ब व</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24</td>
<td>Jaga Deva,...........</td>
<td>ज ब</td>
<td>ग ब व</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>25</td>
<td>Jaga Deva,...........</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>देव</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26</td>
<td>Jaga Deva,...........</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
The Copper Coins of the Sultans of Kashmir.—By C. J. Rodgers.

(With a Plate.)

In nearly all the bazaars of the large cities of the Panjab large quantities of old coins of a peculiar stamp and bearing signs of much usage are obtainable. The reverse of these coins has a bar, with central knot, running from right to left of the coin. This central knot is in some cases elaborate, in others it degenerates into a carelessly formed circle. Above the bar come the words "السلطان الأعظم". The "ن" of Sultán is nearly always hung on the "ل" of that word, while the "ع" crosses the field completely. Below the bar the name of the king is written, occupying as a rule the whole space. In every case, except that of Zain ul-Abidin, the word "شا" is added to the name. The reverse is occupied completely with the words "شهر سنة" and the year is added in Arabic words. Were these coins obtainable in anything like a legible form, they would be exceedingly valuable in settling the chronology of Kashmir. But hitherto, in spite of most extensive search, only poor specimens of most of the kings have been obtained.

The silver coins of these Sultans are all, so far as I know, square. Two of them, Muhammad Ali Sháh and Muhammad Yúsuf Sháh, were published by Mr. Delmerick in J. A. S. B., Pt. I, 1876, Pl. VI, figs. 24 and 25. I have silver coins of the above Muhammad Sháh, Isma'il Sháh, Zain ul-Abidín, Nádir Sháh and Akbar. General Cunningham has others, amongst which are Husain Sháh and Humáyún. In all, this prince of Indian Numismatists has the silver coins of ten Sultans. They are all square and are exceedingly rare.

The copper coins with which this paper has to do are common as a rule. But some of them are of necessity rare. Zain ul-Abidín was the only one who seems to have deviated from the track of the cross bar and central knot. The reverses of his coins exhibit also a divergence from the usual form. They have the word "کشمیر" crossed by the word "شا" and around these words is a quarterfoil lozenge with elaborate knots in the outer corners. Some of this king's coins conform to the bar and knot. I have not given specimens of these, as with so many other kings having them, they were not needed. Some of this king's coins are "brass". See No. 2.

After the time of Akbar the reverses contained the year in "Persian" instead of Arabic. The coins of Husain Sháh and Yúsuf Sháh exhibit these peculiarities. One of the three coins I have of Akbar has on the reverse "شا" where the year is Akbar's Iláhísan. I have said above that I have a square silver coin of Nádir Sháh. Who this king was I do not know. But I have three copper coins of his, with the name on, beyond a doubt. On the silver coin too the name is unmistakable. But history is silent about him, and no list of Kashmir kings that I have seen contains his name. Unfortunately the year is altogether rubbed off. Archaeological explorations in Kashmir should reveal something about this Sultán. It is possible that some of the Sultáns may have rejoiced in several names, and that the one by which he is known to historians is not the one on the coins. We have several instances of this in Indian numismatics. I have not given this king's coins, though I possess three of them. I reserve them for further light, research may throw upon them.

By me just now I have a coin of Dr. Stulpnagel's. It is of a Kashmir Maharájáh. It reads Śrí Pesuta Jáyá Siñha. This has not yet been identified. I have one of my own which reads Java Deva Deva. This I am going to publish though not able to identify the coin. Further study of these coins will give us fuller results. Hitherto numismatists have somewhat neglected them. They (the coins) are filthy looking, very much worn and being nearly illegible are too hard nuts for one to crack in leisure hours, inasmuch as the lines left are so hard to make out that only long study enables any one to feel any certainty about any point. The Kashmir Sultáns as given in Prinsep's Tables are as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>A. H.</th>
<th>A. D.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>715</td>
<td>1315</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>750</td>
<td>1349</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>752</td>
<td>1351</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>765</td>
<td>1363</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>785</td>
<td>1386</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>799</td>
<td>1396</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>819</td>
<td>1416</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>826</td>
<td>1422</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>877</td>
<td>1472</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>878</td>
<td>1473</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>891</td>
<td>1486</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>902</td>
<td>1496</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>911</td>
<td>1505</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>942</td>
<td>1535</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>948</td>
<td>1541</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>960</td>
<td>1552</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>963</td>
<td>1555</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>964</td>
<td>1556</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
C. J. Rodgers—The Copper Coins of Kashmir.

971. 1563. Husain Sháh.
986. 1578. Yúsuf Sháh.

Up to the present I have seen neither silver nor copper coins of one of the first five Sultáns. The coins in our Plate XIII begin with Sikandar Sháh.

No. 1. This coin has the name and titles of the king with bar and knot on the obverse, and on the reverse the legend in Arabic of Zarb-i-Kashmir ft shahur i san. But the year is not legible. There are many features of the reign of each king which it would be interesting to notice, but I will confine myself to the coins.

No. 2. Zain-ul Abidin. Obverse. Name and titles of king, with portions of a knot at the top. Reverse. The words Zarb Kashmir in a quarterfoil, crossing each other. Date on obverse illegible.

No. 3. Same king. Obverse. Name and titles of king, without bar and knot, in a double circle, surrounded with a circle of dots. Reverse. Zarb-i-Kashmir ft Shahur i san i ahd wa arba'in wa Samannaita = 841 A. H.

This king was to Kashmir pretty much what Fíroz Sháh and Akbar were to India. He was a great builder and poet. He got the Mahábhárata translated into Persian and was a patron of learned men. The rulers of Mecca and Egypt, of Gilán, Irán and Túrán kept up correspondence with him. He is the only Sultán who calls himself the Náïb of the Amir ul-Momanín.

No. 5. Haidar Sháh. Obverse. Name and titles of king with bar and knot and the year illegible. Reverse. Zarb ........ ft ........ subain wa samannaita = 87. The 4 on the obverse is distinct; this according to the tables, it ought to be 7. I have two coins of this king. The reverses give no help in solving this difficulty. The second coin has the year on the obverse worn off.

No. 7. Muhammad Sháh. This man began to reign when he was seven years old. Fath Sháh the grandson of Zain ul-Abidín came from India and took the throne. These two kings went on fighting for the supreme power for many years. Fath Sháh gained the throne three times but Muhammad Sháh at last drove him away and sat for the fourth time on the throne of his father. The coin has on the obverse the usual name and titles with bar and knot. Reverse. The year looks like 895. If so this coin was struck during the first period Muhammad reigned.
COPPER COINS OF THE SULTÁNS OF KASHMÍR.
Observations on some Chandel Antiquities.—By V. A. Smith, B. A., C. S., and F. C. Black, C. E.

(With six Plates.)

The careful and accurate descriptions of the Chandel remains at Khajuráho and Mahoba, published by General Cunningham, might be supposed to have exhausted the subject of which he treats, and to leave no gleanings to be picked up by amateur hands. We have, however, in the course of several years’ residence in the Hamírpur District, in which Mahoba is situated, and after careful inspection of the buildings at Khajuráho, collected a few notes, which may, we venture to think, form a useful supplement to the more systematic record of the Director of the Archeological Survey.
The zamindārs of most villages in the small native state of Chhatarpur, in which Khajurāho is situated, are said to be Kurmīs, Kāchhīs, or Brahmans, but in Khajurāho itself we were surprised to find that Chandel Thákurs are still the zamindārs. They comprise only a few families* and claim to be bhumiyaṇ or aboriginal, stating, however, that their ancestors came from Maniyā Gaṛh,† which is the ancient fort of the town of Rājgaṛh, situated on the Ken, a few miles from Chhatarpur.

We were informed that Chandels are not found as zamindārs in any village except Khajurāho, though scattered families exist elsewhere. The Chandel zamindārs who are part proprietors of M. Urwāra in Pargana Mahoba came from Ajnār in Pargana Jaitpur, whence they were expelled by Lodhīs and Brahmans in the time of Jagatrāj Bundela (circa 1750 A. D.); and the Chandels who have a share in Mauza Kaimaha of Pargana Mahoba immigrated at a late date from Sheorājpur in the Cawnpore District.

We know of no other Chandel proprietors in the Hamīrpur District, and the zamindārs of Khajurāho may therefore claim to be the only local representatives of the ancient ruling clan who still retain an honourable position.

At Mahoba we have been told that the Chandel royal house is now represented by Jaimangal Singh of Gidhaur and by other Rājās in the vicinity of Gya.‡

We have repeatedly made efforts to obtain specimens of the Chandel coinage, of which so few pieces have been found, but up to the present our enquiries, both at Khajurāho and elsewhere, have been unsuccessful.

The rarity of the coins of a dynasty which flourished for four centuries may perhaps be plausibly accounted for by the hypothesis that the Chandel coinage was called in by the Musalmāns.

The native official with our camp told us that coins which he spoke of as dukri (the word apparently meaning simply 'old') had been found at Khajurāho and sent into Chhatarpur, but at the latter place, when we tried to get a glimpse of them, we were put off with various excuses. These coins were stated to have borne illegible legends, and were pronounced by the local goldsmiths to consist of a mixture of silver, brass and copper.

* Eleven families according to General Cunningham who mentions their existence.
† Maniya Deo is the tutelary goddess of the Chandels. Vide J. A. S. B., XLVI. Part I, p. 233, and Arch. Rep. VII. 44.
‡ For a brief history of the Rājās of Gidhaur see Statistical Account of Bengal (for the Monghyr District) Vol. XV, pp. 71, 72.
We also heard that minute leaflets* of gold had been found in the fields about Khajuráho on more than one occasion. They were described as being very small, and each pierced with a hole about the size of a barley-corn.

The Political Agent at Nayágaon (Nowgong) informs us that he has never heard of the discovery of any coins at Khajuráho, but there can be little doubt that they must be found from time to time, though their discovery is naturally concealed by the finders who are afraid of being deprived of their prize.

The buildings at Khajuráho have all been noticed by General Cunningham except a small flat-roofed temple, which now forms part of the dwelling house of a zamíndár in the village. This edifice is of no special interest, and a defaced inscription on one of the pillars does not seem to be valuable.

We did not succeed in bringing to light any other new inscription. The brief pilgrim's record on one of the pillars of the Ganthai temple, which is not mentioned by General Cunningham, is noticed in our remarks on that building.

We were told that the fragment of an inscribed stone was lying in one of the zamíndár's houses, but were prevented from seeing it. So many sculptures and other objects have been carried off from Khajuráho by visitors and pilgrims that the people are now very unwilling to show anything which is likely to excite the cupiditv of an antiquarian or devotee.

General Cunningham (II. 434) describes a 'magic square' cut on the right jamb of the door of the Jinanáth temple and observes—"The figure "8 is remarkable for an additional stroke on the left side, which I take to "be a mark of antiquity, as it is a near approach to the figure in my "Suhaniya numeral inscription." It is, however, perhaps worth while to note that this additional stroke is cut to a depth much less than that of the rest of the figure, and that it is scarcely discernible on the stone though clearly visible in a rubbing (Plate XIV). The other figures too of the square are almost identical with the modern forms, and the antiquity of the sculpture may well be doubted.

It is much to be regretted that the short inscription of eleven lines on the left jamb of the door of the same Jinanáth temple has not been published in facsimile and translated in full.

General Cunningham has given two abstract translations of it (Arch. Rep. II. 433 and J. A. S. B. XXIX, p. 395), and its date,† on which doubt

* Particles of gold-leaf are found among the ruins of Manikyála. (Cunn. Arch. Rep. II. 170.)
† For a rubbing of this date, see Plate XV.
V. A. Smith—Observations on some Chandel Antiquities. [No. 4, was at one time thrown, may be accepted as certainly being Samvat 1011, but the reading of the Rájá’s name is still unsettled, General Cunningham being in doubt whether the initial letter is Dh or Gh; it looks quite as like Sh, and is certainly different from the ordinary Kutila form of Dh.

Not only this short inscription, but all the leading Chandel inscriptions require to be carefully edited. Of the three great inscriptions at Khajuráho one only has been published at length, viz., that dated 1056 Samvat, now built into the wall inside the entrance of the Vis’vanáth temple. This record was translated by Mr. Sutherland (J. A. S. B., for 1839, Vol. VIII, p. 159), but with many errors, some of which have since been corrected by General Cunningham. (Proc. A. S. B., for 1865 (1) p. 99.)

The other equally large inscriptions, viz., that dated 1058 Samvat, now built into the temple wall opposite that above mentioned, and that of Rájá Dhanga, dated 1011 Samvat, now built into the wall on the right side of the entrance to the Chatarbhuja temple, are referred to in the Archaeological Report (II, pp. 423, 426), but have never been published or translated, and we understand that other inscriptions of the Chandel dynasty, concerning which nothing has yet been made public, are in General Cunningham’s hands.

The main outlines of the Chandel chronology* have been established beyond dispute, but many details are still unsettled, and there is much difficulty in reconciling the statements of several of the inscriptions which have been given to the public in a more or less perfect form. Maisey’s† inscriptions from Kalinjar were translated a long time ago, when skill in deciphering inscriptions was a rarer accomplishment than it is now, and both the text and translation of the records published by him seem to require revision by a competent scholar.

The drying up of the Kírát Ságar at Mahoba this year has disclosed a large broken Jain statue of Sumatináth with an inscription, dated “in the victorious reign of S’ríman Madana Varmma Samvat 1215 Pús Sudi 10.” (Plate XV).‡

* By a recent attempt to settle the genealogy (J. A. S. B., XLVII, Part I, p. 74) Dr. Rájendraála Mitra has added to the confusion. He reduces Samvat dates to the Christian era by subtracting 55 instead of 57 as usual, and he ignores the two new plates published at p. 80 of the same number of the Journal, and uses Sutherland’s erroneous date of 1019 in the Dhanga inscription which was long ago corrected to 1056. He also omits all mention of Rájá Parmal or Parmárdi and of the other inscriptions of Madana Varmma, which show that the Dr.’s date of 1150 A. D. for the close of Madana Varmma’s reign is much too early.

† J. A. S. B., XVII, Part I, 171, 313 (for 1848).

‡ General Cunningham (Arch. Rep. II. 448) mentions an image of Sumatináth at Mahoba, dated in 1213 Samvat.
Figures 8 and 11 in Magic Square, Jina Nath Temple.

Pilgrim’s Inscription, Ganthai Temple, size 1/2 of orig.

Tracing of Rubbing of Figure 8 in Magic Square.

INSCRIPTIONS FROM KHAJURAHO.
RUBBING OF INSCRIPTION ON A FIGURE OF DEBI AT GULAWOR KHERA
The form of the figure 5 in this inscription is almost the same as that employed in the Khajuráho inscription dated 1056.

Madana Varmma evidently enjoyed a long reign, as is shown by his numerous inscriptions.

At the Guláwar Kherá in the north of Mauza Chhikahra, Pargana Mahoba, a sandstone figure of Dévi, found some years ago in a well, bears the following inscription (Plate XVI) in clearly cut characters—

"Thakkura Śrī Gangakena Dévi Káráyitam.

"Samvat 1166."

No Rájá's name is mentioned, but the year 1166 probably fell in the reign of Prithíví Varmma.

The people believe that in its palmy days Mahoba included 52 towns or bazárs, one of them being Guláwar Kherá. The latter was certainly the site of a considerable settlement, for the marks of foundations of buildings extend for about a mile. There are the ruins here of three small granite shrines, and a fourth is said to have formerly existed.

The popular tradition about the 52 bazárs perhaps indicates that Mahoba was the chief town in a Báoni or pargana of 52 towns and villages.

The drought this year has also brought to light a sixth life-size sandstone elephant at the ruined temple known as Madárí, (near the standing Kakra Marh temple*) in the Madan Ságar at Mahoba, where General Cunningham saw only five.

We cannot accept his suggestion that these huge statues were ever “projected in mid air” from the spires, but from their size and present position it is quite plain that the alternative which he suggests is the true one, and that they were erected in pairs at each of the three entrances to the temple.

The temple of Vis’vanáth at Khajuráho has two half life-size elephants standing near it on the ground, which may formerly have been placed at the entrance. They are decidedly inferior in execution, as well as in size, to the Mahoba elephants.

Two others, still smaller, are lying in the field near the temple dedicated to Súrya, to the entrance of which they probably served as an ornament.

On the temple of Vis’vanáth several small elephants are to be seen projecting from the angles of the roof. Originally they seem to have been

* The name Kakra Marh is said to refer to the worship of Siva (Arch. Rep. II, 442). A ruined temple at Sált about 9 miles west of Mahoba, close to which Jain images of the 12th century A. D. have been found is also known as Kakra Marh.
fourteen in number, and five are still in position, supported on flat brackets, which now look weak owing to the absence of the slender stone props which supported the outer end of the brackets, of which the inner ends rest on the boldly projecting eaves of the balcony roofs. The mortice holes into which the props were inserted are still plainly visible, and in the Kandariya Mahadeo temple, the steeple of which is also adorned with small elephants, one at least of these props is in place.

The appearance of these little elephants, when the pedestal is perfect, is not inelegant.

The subject of the construction of the Khajuráho temples has hardly been touched on in the published accounts, a few words on this topic may therefore be found of interest.

In the Hamírpur District granite alone has been used for the construction of the religious edifices, sandstone being employed only for decorative purposes. At Khajuráho on the other hand almost all the temples are built entirely of sandstone, the only exclusively granite building being the so-called Chaonsat Joginí temple.

We noticed, however, that several of the sandstone temples rest on a granite foundation, which is almost concealed from view. Judging from the number of granite pillars lying about, it is probable that at one time many buildings of the coarser material existed at Khajuráho.

The sikharas or steeples of the larger temples are very graceful in design; that of Kandariya Mahadeo is perhaps the best, but those of the Chaturbhuj and Vis'vanáth temples are almost equal to it.

The steeples, except those over the sanctum, which seem to be solid, are so constructed as to include many spaces or chambers, the intention evidently being to lighten the weight of the mass of masonry. We could find no trace of mortar in the joints of the stones with dressed outer faces which form the casing, but it has been freely used to bind together the undressed inner stones.

Access to the roof of all the chief temples is obtained through a small square hole at the top of one of the side walls of the sanctum, which can be reached by climbing over the sculptures.

The domes at Khajuráho are of course all constructed in the usual Indian way with courses of overlapping stones. The architects seem to have felt a difficulty in spanning a considerable space with a self-supporting dome of this kind, and have accordingly in several of the great cruciform temples introduced four extra columns in the middle of the mahámandapa to assist in bearing the weight. This arrangement has the advantage of giving an appearance of richness to the interior, and of giving additional facilities for a display of sculpture and carving, but is disadvantageous in depriving the building of the massive grandeur derived from the conquest of structural difficulties by bold and simple architecture.

Two only of the Khajurāho temples have self-supporting domes. One of these is the unrestored temple of Kunwar Maṭh, where the interior diameter of the dome is 14‘9,” and the other is the temple of Mritang Mahadeo,* where the architect has succeeded in spanning, without any extraneous support, a space with a diameter of 22 feet.

The fine granite temple at Makarbaś in Pargana Mahoba has a self-supporting dome 15‘3” in diameter. With these three exceptions, we have not found any horizontal dome of more than 12 feet in diameter, built without central support.

It is somewhat remarkable that the Indian architects should not have constructed larger domes of this kind, for the horizontal dome of the celebrated ‘Treasury of Atreus’ at Mycenae has an internal diameter of 48 feet.†

The restorations at Khajurāho have been extensive both in the Jain and Brahmanical temples, so extensive indeed that arguments based on an examination of structural details require careful scrutiny.

The most extensive restorations of the Brahmanical temples in recent times were effected by Rājā Partāp Singh of Chhatarpur; who died in 1854 A. D. and who left directions in his will that five rupees daily should continue to be spent on the repair of the buildings, directions which have not been fully carried out.

The restorations carried out under the orders of Rājā Partāp Singh are, as a rule, judicious, and have maintained the general appearance and outlines of the buildings without attempting to add any features not included in the original design.

The steeple (sikhara) have been repaired with brick and mortar work, showing a smooth surface, which does not correspond with the carving of the old stone work, but, inasmuch as the outline has been carefully preserved, and the plaster has got darkened by age, the repairs are seldom offensive to the eye. In the temples of Kandariya Mahadeo, Vis‘vanāth, and Chaturbhuja they are scarcely visible till sought for, but in the temple of the Sun and some others they are more clumsily executed.

Many of the carved stones belonging to the steeple have been built into walls and steps, though a little more care on the part of the masons might perhaps have found the places to which the stones originally belonged.

* See Plate XVII for a plan of this building more detailed than that given by General Cunningham.
† E. Dobson’s Treatise on Masonry and Stone-cutting, page 8.
The temples usually stand, each on a massive rectangular terrace, and the greater number of loose stones found lying about have been built into the walls of these terraces.

The best preserved terraces are those belonging to the temples of Chaturbhuj and the Sun. When they were complete, a parapet, the upper portion of which sloped outwards, ran round the edge of each terrace, and inside this was attached a broad stone shelf supported on small pillars.

The main pillars of the principal temples are no doubt in their original positions, but considerable irregularities occur owing to the insertion in many places of extra pillars to support cracked cross-beams.

In the smaller temples which surround and are subsidiary to the great fanes, the pillars have been much changed about, and some have been brought in from inferior buildings.

The flights of steps leading up to the entrances of the temples have been freely restored, and little attention paid to the original design, which evidently comprised only a single narrow flight of stairs leading to the door of the main building.

On close inspection it is evident that the restorations are not all of one period, but that some are old, and in some cases the building has had time to fall to ruin again since the restoration. Examples of these early restorations may be observed in the Kunwar Math and adjoining temple which were not repaired by Rájá Partáp Singh.

It is a pity that the repairs of the group of temples to which the Kunwar Math belongs (Nos. 17, 18, 29, 30 and 35 in General Cunningham’s plan) are not proceeded with. These buildings lie somewhat out of the way and have consequently received little notice, but they are handsome structures and superior in ornamentation to some of the western group, though not so richly decorated as the great temples dedicated to Kandariya Mahadeo, Víśvanáth and Chaturbhuj.

The dome of Kunwar Math is especially worth preserving on account of its large size.

The temple at Jatkári dedicated to Víshnu is remarkable from its position with reference to the cardinal points. The entrance faces the west, and the shrine the east, which arrangement is exactly the reverse of that adopted in all the other Brahmanical temples, except the smallest shrines.

The restorations of the Brahmanical temples, although considerable, are trifling compared with those of the Jain temples, which are subjected to continuous and rather undiscriminating repair and modification.

It may we fear be thought presumptuous in us to feel hesitation in adopting a conclusion respecting the age and destination of a building which has been arrived at by so experienced a scholar as General Cunning-
Beginning of Inscription on base of a broken Jain image, showing date 1215.

Rubbing of date 1014 in Inscription of eleven lines, in Jinarath Temple.

INSCRIPTIONS FROM KHAJURÁHO.
ham, and has been in part accepted by Mr. Fergusson, but, as regards the Ganthai temple at Khajuráho, we feel compelled to differ from these authorities. The former is of opinion that this temple is a Buddhist building of the 6th or 7th century; the latter declares it to be most likely Jain and not Buddhist, but accepts General Cunningham's date as approximately correct. The arguments, however, adduced by General Cunningham in favour of the early age of this structure appear singularly weak. They are two, (1) that the seated 4-armed female statuette over the centre of the entrance "is most probably a figure of Dharmma, who was either the first or the second person of the Buddhist triad," and (2) that a pedestal lying near bore the well known profession of the Buddhist faith in characters of the 6th or 7th century.

Of these two reasons the first is admittedly conjectural, and the second is of little force, for the General immediately goes on to say that several naked Jain statues of a much later date, one being actually dated 1085 A. D.,† are lying among the adjacent ruins. It seems to us therefore that these facts go as far to prove that the temple is of the 11th century, as they do to prove it to belong to the 6th or 7th, and General Cunningham admits that they "would seem to show that the old Buddhist temple had been appropriated to their own use by the Jains of the eleventh century." But in reality the position of detached statues in an ancient site like Khajuráho, which has evidently been the scene of repeated vicissitudes and restorations, is worthless as a proof of the antiquity of adjoining buildings. A close examination of the remains makes it plain, as we have above remarked, that very many of the buildings have been more or less reconstructed, and a very cursory inspection shows that images and sculptures have been freely shifted about from place to place.

On the second sandstone pillar on the left of the Ganthai temple as you enter there is a short pilgrim's inscription not noticed by General Cunningham (Plate XIV). The characters in this inscription are certainly not of a very early form, and seem to be of about the eleventh century. The presence of this record of a comparatively late date, and the absence of any earlier inscription on the building itself tend to support the opinion that the temple is not so ancient as has been supposed.‡ Mr. Fergusson bases his opinion of the high antiquity of the Ganthai temple on "the character of its architectural details," but he gives no explanation of this opinion, and in the absence of such explanation a mere expression of opinion fails to carry conviction.

† This is now lost, as also is the pedestal with the Buddhist inscription.
‡ Ind. Arch. 1876, p. 247.
The arguments above given in favour of a possible late date for the Ganthai temple appear to us not to be undeserving of consideration, but we rely mainly on the evidence afforded by the construction of the building itself, in support of the conclusion at which we have arrived that the temple in question is a comparatively late re-arrangement of the materials of earlier buildings, some of which may possibly be as old as the whole edifice has been supposed to be. There appears to be no good evidence to show to which religion the building belonged, but, as all the immediate surroundings are Jain, it may, in the absence of proof to the contrary, be assigned to the professors of that faith.

The name of Ganthai would appear to be derived from the bells sculptured on the columns as supposed by Dr. Fergusson, and the villagers also gave this reason for the name. As stated by General Cunningham, the only portions now standing are the four pillars of the porch, the carved entrance, the four pillars of the inner mandap or hall, some pilasters of granite which were built into the surrounding wall, and some portions of the roof.

The plan of the existing portion is shown on Plate XVII, and the dotted lines show the probable shape of the temple when complete.

This rectangular form we derive from the existing temple of Jinanáth and are confirmed in our supposition by the plan of the Jain temple represented in Plate XLV of Burgess, Arch. Survey of Western India, 1874.

The Ganthai must therefore have been intended to be a large temple, larger than even Jinanáth, which is the largest of the Jain temples. Assuming the building to have ever been completed and then allowed to fall into ruin, the mass of debris must have been very great, much greater than could easily have been removed, but the present remains consist of the columns and portions of the roof stated above and absolutely nothing else.

There is no trace whatever of the sanctum, which must, if it ever existed, have been very massive and crowned by a huge steeple. Nothing, except the pilasters above mentioned, remains of the thick side walls, which would necessarily have been constructed, and it is not likely that the stones of the sanctum, side walls and spire could have so completely disappeared, if they were ever there.

From this we are inclined to think that the present building is an unfinished portion of what was intended to have been a very large temple, but which was never completed, and which, as we now proceed to show, was itself a reconstruction. We are led to believe this, not only from the disappearance of the materials of the wanting portion, but also from what is now standing having been put together in a clumsy and unsystematic manner. The outer pilasters are so irregular that it is evident that they
PLAN OF TEMPLES IN KHAJURAHO
PLAN OF TEMPLES IN KHAJURAO.
Bamhauri.

Sanctum.

Open Balcony

Entrance Porch.
were never intended for the positions they now occupy. They do not match with each other either in pattern or size. Some are propped up by a block placed underneath, whilst others have a piece added to the top to lengthen them. The thickness, the width and the patterns differ more or less in all. This is never the case in temples which have not been restored. The mechanical regularity with which the pillars and ornaments correspond to each other in undisturbed temples is remarkable. But in the Ganthai temple not only do the granite pilasters not match, but even the eight sandstone columns are irregular.* There are four pairs of them, and the decoration of each of these pairs has certain minute peculiarities, though the general style of all is the same. The accompanying Plate XVIII will illustrate our meaning; the several pairs of corresponding pillars being A and B, C and D, E and F, and G and H; and the reader will observe that some of the pillars which match each other are in unsymmetrical positions. That the restoring of old temples, and in many cases the absolute construction of new temples out of old materials, is constantly going on at Khajuráho is seen from the group of Jain temples east of Ganthai, where the work of building and repairing is so continual, that, with three exceptions, viz., Jinanáth, Parswanáth and the shrine of the Colossus of Adináth, it is difficult to say of any building that it is now as it originally stood.

Some undescribed buildings in the Hamírpur District appear sufficiently remarkable to deserve description, and we close this paper with a brief notice of one group of them. For the plans of these temples, see Plate XIX. The three temples now described are of small size, but, judging from their shape, are doubtless Jain. They are situated (1) at Bará Taláo, near the village of Pahra, 14 miles north-east of the tahsíl town of Mahoba; (2) at Makarbaí, 9 miles distant in the same direction; and (3) at Bamhaurí, 4 miles south-east of Makarbaí. This last village Bamhaurí is not now in the Hamírpur District, having been ceded to the native state of Charkari after the mutiny.

In these temples the shape is a rectangle, the sides of which face the cardinal points of the compass, with a sanctum in the middle of the western side, opposite to which is the entrance porch.

The roof, which is low, is supported internally on eight short pillars very simply ornamented, and surmounted by plain capitals over which are placed the stone beams which support a perfectly unornamented ceiling. Over the sanctum was a sikhara or steeple, which at Bamhaurí is still stand-

* The accounts of General Cunningham and Mr. Fergusson seem to us to ex-aggerate the beauty of these pillars, and indeed to attach to this Ganthai temple much more importance than it deserves.
ing, slightly ruined, but which is wanting both in the temple at Barsí and at Makarbaí.

In this last one the entrance to the sanctum has been walled up, so that the shrine is not visible. The floors of the shrines at Barsí and Bamhaurí are both somewhat below the level of the floor of the main chamber.

The material of these three temples is granite, the walls being constructed of wide slabs set on edge, and externally two bands of ornamented moulding run round the building.

From some fragments of stucco adhering to the outside of the Barsí temple it would appear to have been covered with plaster. This temple differs somewhat from the other two in having two openings for light in the middle of the shorter sides of the mandapa or hall, whilst the temples at Makarbaí and Bamhaurí have closed sides and only obtain light from the front of the building. We were unable to find any inscription at any of these temples, and the villagers only know them by the name of Baitňaks. The name of the taládo on the edge of which the first temple stands is Barsí, and an ancient village site to the west is also called Barsí. The maker of the lake is said to be Bár Brahman Chandel.* To the east of the temple stands a small shrine which we have not described, it being of no special interest. The neighbouring village of Palfa is also known under the name of Khajuráha. In another paper we hope to describe some other buildings which have hitherto either altogether escaped notice or been inadequately described. While we were engaged on this paper, Vol. VII of the Archaeological Reports has appeared, but the notes recorded in it, are so meagre, and in some details so incorrect, that much remains to be done before it can be said that the antiquities of Bundelkhand have received adequate treatment.

* Bár Brahman (i. e. Varmma) is not mentioned in any known inscription, but is included in the bards' lists of the Chandel princes. He was probably not a ruling chief, but one of the members of the ruling family.